Some Gangster, Napoleon India, British View The Rumanians Danced Bankers Steady Stocks

—By Arthur Brisbane—

NAPOLEON SAID his government could not last if he allowed liberty of the press.

Chicago gangsters seem to have heard about that. On Monday a gangster bullet in the back of the head killed Alfred Lingle, Chicago Tribune reporter.

Lingle, it seems, knew more about gang criminals than a reporter ought to know, according to gang standards.

Mr. McCormick, who publishes the Tribune, is a young man of some energy. Perhaps he will find a way to discourage shooting his reporters.

It affects the price of silver and that affects prices of many commodities.

It disturbs the British government, affecting British trade.

It will interest the intelligent to read parts that follow of a letter from one of the ablest, best known, most influential men in England.

First he describes the Viceroy, on whose judgment much depends:

"The Viceroy is an earnest and an honest fellow—not quite stupid, but inexperienced in worldly affairs. He is a typical example of a 'safe-guarded' member of the Conservative party.

"He was brought up with a silver spoon in his mouth, and he has led a sheltered life. Bad speeches by him are praised as masterpieces of oratory; good speeches are looked upon as unprecedented in history.

"The Viceroy was continually spoken of during his House of Commons career as of prime ministerial timber. But he has never had to face the realities of the world.

"Honourable and trustworthy, his word can be relied upon, and his promises are always performed. He leads a splendid private life with no feminine influences in it, believing in a big god with long boots, praying to him mightily for guidance.

"Such a man, if he stumbles on to the right course, will do it through God's grace and not on account of any worldly wisdom."

To his excellent description of a typical British diplomat the writer of the letter adds:

"The day that a policy of repression be decided on will mark the end of the crisis.

"There is no sense or reason in comparing the position with the Irish situation, which the Indians quote. In Ireland we were never free to bomb towns, wipe out villages, or turn machine guns on the people. In India we can, and the rebellion can be crushed the moment a decision is taken to do so.

"Will we do it? I say 'Yes, of course we will.'

"The English are a kindly but determined race. I need not tell you that in addition to their justice, their kindliness and their mercy, their critics believe them to be capable of extreme cruelty when the occasion demands it. It is a mistaken belief.

"How much further the trouble will go in India depends on how long we delay in taking repressive decisions."

The man who writes this is well informed, not guessing, and he knows his own country. The British will be good natured as long as they can do so safely. After that, machine guns and airplanes will convince 300,000,000 Asiatics that they must not rebel against a handful of Englishmen, 7000 miles away.

When King Carol came back, abandoning the joys of travel, and offered to make up with his neglected wife, the Rumanians, according to press dispatches, delighted, danced in the streets.

All that is their business. Theirs to choose a king, if they choose, and the kind of a king that they want.

But let us be glad that, thus far, no League of Nations, or World Court can make it the business of Uncle Sam to send over men and money, in case anybody should attempt to interfere with the new King, Carol.

Russia thinks she needs Rumania. If we were in the original League of Nations, and Russia should attack Rumania, we should be told just how many men and dollars we must send to keep King Carol on his throne.

Bankers were "in the market" yesterday "steadying stocks." Not long ago, some bankers were in the market, unsteadying stocks by dumping new securities, ten, twenty, forty million

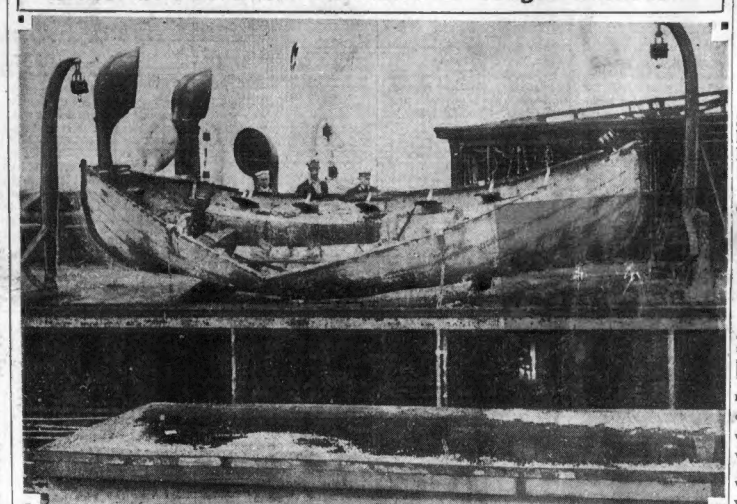
Liner Shows Mute Evidence of Tragic Collision



LIFEBOAT, CRUSHED and burned, was mute evidence of how the dead of the liner Fairfax came to their ghastly end in the collision of the liner with the tanker Pinthis off Scituate last night. The boat is on the upper deck, where many of the passengers and crew were gathered, peering through the fog, when the crash occurred and blazing oil was sprayed on the Fairfax. The burned superstructure of the ship is back of the lifeboat at the right. (Staff photo.)

Oil Tanker Sinks and Many Die in Fire Bath

At least 48 persons were incinerated or drowned last night off Scituate in a sea collision and explosion, whose horrors were followed today by charges of cowardice on the part of some of the liner Fairfax crew and an investigation as to whether a proper S O S call was sent out for help.

Not one of the 19 men aboard the oil tanker Pinthis escaped the collision and explosion.

A woman believed to be Mrs. May Dearborn, 34, widow, of 417 Centre st., Newton, died while being brought back to Boston. A second passenger, Mrs. Ida Berkowitz, 22, of 58 Holworthy st., Roxbury, died at Carney Hospital, a martyr to mother love.

Sixteen members of the Fairfax crew have been definitely listed as identified dead, as well as a navy seaman who died while attempting to rescue a woman.

There are still 10 passengers aboard the Fairfax marked as missing and undoubtedly lost.

The list of probably dead was made up as follows: Nineteen gone down with the tanker; 16 identified in the Fairfax crew; one identified as of the navy; two dead women passengers and 10 Fairfax passengers missing, probably dead.

Throughout the day, because of faulty passenger and crew lists, the number of dead fluctuated between 40 and 50.

An investigation of the Massachusetts Bay horror, one of the worst in years, was begun today by Federal Inspectors O. G. Haines, Charles Lyons and John Stewart.

Their investigation was pointed particularly at charges of cowardice on the part of members of the crew of the Fairfax, and at charges that no proper S O S was sent from the liner and word of the seriousness of the tragedy was withheld.

According to passengers aboard the liner, members of the crew tore life belts off passengers, including women and children, and rushed life boats armed with clubs and hatchets.

Although declared otherwise by officials of the line, passengers asserted that scenes of wildest confusion followed the crash and explosion of the gasoline and oil-laden tanker.

The Fairfax was bound from Boston to Norfolk and Baltimore, while the tanker was en route from Fall River to Portland, Me.

A hearing on the fatal ship crash, particularly as it concerns the alleged failure of the Fairfax to send an S O S, will be held tomorrow at 9 a. m. in the appraiser's stores building.

It is planned to call to this meeting the wireless operator of the Fairfax, the captain, pilot, lookout man, the engineer and his subordinates, and as many of the crew and passengers of the ill-fated steamer as can be located.

The Fairfax was headed for the outside course around Cape Cod, while the Pinthis had emerged from the Cape Cod Canal and was cutting across the outside course to the northward.

When the Fairfax, burned and with a huge hole 10 feet by 10 feet torn in her starboard bow, returned to Boston at 10:05 today, none of the remaining crew was allowed to talk, but many wore bandages on hands and heads.

From the appearance of the liner, she was rammed just aft of her bow on what was the land side as she headed for Provincetown to round the Cape.

The entire port side of the liner was scorched badly, while the boats, still hanging from blackened davits, were badly burned.

Vice-President and General Manager D. R. McNeil of the line was the first man aboard the ship as it docked and was greeted by Capt. A. H. Brooks, commander of the vessel.

Capt. Albert G. Jones was in command of the tanker Pinthis and went down with his crew on the flaming craft.

There were 10 injured or burned passengers on the Fairfax at the Carney Hospital in South Boston, five of them on the danger list, when the Fairfax limped back to port.

"Eleven members of the Fairfax crew, armed with hatchets and clubs, rushed a lifeboat."

"No proper S O S was sent."

These charges and others, involving cowardice, lack of discipline and lack of foresight, were made today by survivors of the Fairfax-Pinthis disaster, and are under investigation by federal authorities.

The most serious charges were made by two United States naval men, generally hailed by survivors as outstanding heroes of the tragedy. They are Chief Signalman George Farrell and Chief Quartermaster Edward J. Cullen, both members of the crew of the airplane carrier, U. S. S. Lexington, who were en route to Norfolk, Va., to join their ship.

Their stories were borne out by those of other survivors, including Mary Chamberlin of Milton, who was trampled upon in the panic; Herbert Carstairs, Washington, advertising man; Iona Browne and Sarah Poynton, government employes at Washington, and Marine Corps Private A. P. Saulnier of Brockton.

Scenes of horror and cowardice, which could not be described

New York and was chartered by C. E. Marlborough of New York, whose agents are the New England Oil Co.

Fifteen hours after the disaster, the Coast Guard cutter Tampa radioed to Commander H. R. Searles, commandant of local Coast Guard headquarters, that gasoline was still burning on the sea's surface near Humarock buoy.

"In view of explosion, no chance for survivors," the message said. "Patrol has been called off."

The Fairfax left her pier at Boston yesterday at 5 p. m. (6 p. m. Daylight time) in one of the thickest fogs that ever has blanketed the New England coast.

At the same hour, the tanker Pinthis was traversing the Cape Cod canal on her run from Fall River toward Portland.

The majority of the Fairfax's 71 passengers were vacationists bound for the southlands, while the others were made up mainly of naval men and Marines returning to their stations or ships. Also on board the Fairfax were a crew of 70.

According to passengers, the coastal liner was creeping through fog so thick that one's hand could barely be discerned when held at arm's length.

Flaming Victims Dived Off Ship Into Sea of Fire

The liner's fog horn was blowing steadily, but despite the fog and mist there were many passengers on deck.

Suddenly, at 7:05 p. m. (8:05 p. m. daylight time), there was a terrific crash and an explosion. A tower of flame shot into the air and then cascaded down over almost the entire liner.

Men and women passengers, as well as members of the crew were trapped in the blazing rain. The radio antenna collapsed and fell to the deck.

Flaming humans, shrieking insanely with their pain, ran blindly across the deck and went into the sea—only to fall into a tossing ocean of flame made of the oil and gasoline from the stricken tanker.

The most graphic eye-witness story of the horrible moments following the crash was told by Edward G. Cullen, chief quartermaster of the U. S. S. Lexington, airplane carrier, a passenger on the Fairfax.

Cullen said he had just come on deck in the fog and was standing on the port side when he was nearly knocked to the deck by the force of the collision.

Another craft was engaged at the bow of the Fairfax, the navy man said, and when the cascade of flame ceased after the explosion, he saw a tanker wallowing in the fog as it vanished again into the mist. The tanker appeared to be sinking rapidly.

Cullen said the tanker then was a mass of flames and that flaming liquid was pouring out over the sea.

Blazing oil fell on seven passengers within the navy man's sight, four of them women, and they all ran blindly to the side and plunged into the sea of flame below—without a chance for life.

Screams of others burned rent the fog-smothered air and Cullen thought he could hear screams from the inferno that was the tanker, dimly red in the mist.

Sailors were attempting to launch boats, but the heat of the fire on the ocean's tossing surface and the heat from the burning sides of the Fairfax where gasoline and oil had laid a film drove the sailors back.

From a lower deck a woman, her clothing aflame, attempted to dive into the sea but J. V. Waters of Kittery, Me., a navy sailor bound for Norfolk, seized her and attempted to lift her back, away from the flaming water.

Women Kneel in Prayer on the Hurricane Deck

Her weight was too much for the sailor, however, and she dragged him overboard. They both disappeared in the blazing oil.

On the hurricane deck of the Fairfax a group of women, in the midst of the horrible scenes, knelt in prayer according to Harry Hutchcroft of Jacksonville, Fla., a Marine.

A few seconds before, he said, they had started for the rail, apparently with intent to jump into the sea,—but then, suddenly changing their minds, knelt, praying, with fear-stricken eyes.

The marine was one of four returning to Nicaragua to serve with the United States Election Commission. He and his companions had dashed from their stateroom when they felt the crash. The marine told also of seeing a man and woman, the latter carrying a child, plunge overboard and perish.

According to Harry Jain, of Quincy, also a Navy sailor, the whole top deck of the Fairfax from bow to stern was enveloped with flaming oil after the explosion.

The sailor, who was bound to Norfolk, to rejoin the U. S. S. Chaumont, said he was in the smoking room with six other men and with them rushed to the deck.

All seveg stood by and placed themselves under command of the liner's officers, but little could be done in the way of rescue work because of the lake of flame surrounding the ship.

With other volunteers, Jain and his companions, after vainly trying to get lifeboats down into clear water, went below and smashed in doors of staterooms to rescue persons overcome by smoke and fumes.

Meanwhile nurses who were on board the Fairfax turned to with aid for persons burned by the shocking flame, but were hurried sufficiently to lose their heads and attempt to fling themselves into the sea.

Unmindful of their own danger, the nurses labored in the fearful glare of the flames and were still working when the sister ship of the Fairfax arrived alongside hours later.

Frantic efforts to repair the wireless were being made during this time by the radio crew and volunteers among the navy men aboard.

Meanwhile the coastal steamer Gloucester sped out from Boston when word was received from the liner, after a naval man had repaired the antenna, was groping in the fog attempting to locate the Fairfax.

Had to Wait Four Hours for Relief Ship to Arrive

It was four hours after the crash before the Gloucester found her stricken sister ship.

Despite the rough sea and the pitches of flaming sea still in evidence, the surviving passengers, with attending nurses were transferred in small boats to the Gloucester.

Then the Gloucester headed back through the fog for Boston, where relatives, apprised through news bulletins over the radio of the disaster but knowing nothing of its seriousness, were beginning to gather at the Merchants & Miners dock.

There were also gathering ambulances and doctors, indicating that while help available had not been informed of tragedy the company officials either had been or feared it.

The arrival of the Gloucester with its cargo of injured and stunned witnesses to the tragedy was vastly different from the return of most ships carrying vacationers.

Carefully but hastily the injured were carried or led down the gangplank to the waiting ambulances and were taken to the Carney Hospital. Then the uninjured came to join friends and relatives or seek telephone and telegraph stations to wire news of their safety home.

The body of a woman who died aboard the Gloucester while the latter was coming up the harbor was taken to the Northern Mortuary.

Those who have declared she came from Maynard and to have mentioned the names of Elsworth and either Dearborn or Osborne. No such names, however, appear on the passenger list.

The first person to be taken off was a woman whose face and head were badly burned. A young girl with her hand bandaged was led down and then followed a negro who tried to smile in spite of his pain.

A check-up of the passenger list was started by the company officials as soon as the passengers had been landed.

Mrs. M. Brooks, who had been reported by her son as missing when he did not see her come off the Gloucester, later was found at the Carney Hospital. Her daughter Mary was not at the hospital and was believed among the missing.

2 FEARED DEAD ON SHIP ALIVE

An amazing return from the dead was staged by two members of the liner Fairfax's crew today, when J. V. Eubech, quartermaster, and Joseph Coco, waiter, appeared at the Merchants & Miners dock shortly after their names had been given out by a news agency as among the lost.

Their clothing and bodies burned and water-soaked, the men told a thrilling story of their escape from the flaming ship, of being picked up by a fishing schooner and brought to Boston.

After relating their experience and convincing officials of their identity, the men collapsed, and were given medical treatment.

Eubech and Coco said they had leaped overboard when the Fairfax burst into flames, after they had been severely burned.

For two hours, according to the men, they swam about in the ocean, managing to avoid the flaming oil with which the surface near the steamer was covered.

Eventually a burning lifeboat drifted into view and they boarded it and extinguished the flames.

For some time thereafter, barely conscious as a result of their experiences, they drifted about, to be picked up by the schooner and taken to Commonwealth pier, from which they made their way to the Merchants & Miners offices. They appeared just four minutes after the official list of dead, containing their names, had been given out.

Trod On in Ship Inferno

KNOCKED DOWN AND INJURED during the panic aboard the liner Fairfax while flames swept lives into eternity and all was mad confusion, Miss Mary Chamberlin of 128 Blue Hill parkway, Milton, is at her home today, thankful the disaster was no greater. She was trod under foot as fear-stricken persons fled from the flames after the crash. (Photo by White.)

Milton Girl Knocked Down in Panic; Sees Two Die

Knocked down and trampled on when the Fairfax crashed into the tanker, Miss Mary Chamberlin, 26, a telephone operator at 128 Blue Hill ave., Milton, was among those rescued.

Recovering at her home today Miss Chamberlin told of witnessing the death of two passengers, and of the scenes which ensued following the collision.

Miss Chamberlin was bound for Norfolk with her cousin, William J. Meagher, Milton dentist, and his wife, who are among the missing.

"It was after supper," she said, "that my cousin and his wife said they were going to walk on the promenade deck. When I last saw them they were on the side of the boat nearest to the point of collision. I was talking with a young girl from Norfolk, who felt slightly seasick, and we stood at the rail furthest away from the point of the crash.

PREMONITION OF EVIL

"She told me she was to be married in August and that she had a premonition that something was going to happen. I myself also had not planned to [illegible] but at the [illegible] decided to do so and has been ever since we left the dock.

"While we were talking the ship struck the oil tanker a terrible blow. Debris from the tanker flew up over the bow of our boat, then there were flames over everything and the tanker disappeared in dense clouds of black smoke.

"The girl cried: 'Shall we jump in the water?' but a man who was standing nearby warned us not to. He said the sea would soon be a mass of flames.

"The girl became hysterical, however, and almost in the twinkling of an eye climbed to the rail, put both hands to her ears, screamed and leaped into the sea.

"A young man in a naval uniform rushed up and tried to catch her as she jumped, but was unsuccessful and lost his own balance, falling overboard. I never saw either of them again.

"By that time there was a lot of excitement verging on panic, with men and women rushing about, shouting and screaming, flames leaping from the bow and port side of the steamer, and clouds of smoke.

ALL SEEMED DOOMED

"I was knocked down by the crowd and someone trampled on my hand and I was badly bruised about the body. I managed to get to my feet and didn't know what to do, but fortunately remained where I was on deck.

"If I had been in my stateroom I would have been burned to death, for it was on the port side and was consumed by flames. As it was, my hair was singed.

"It seemed ages before the Gloucester appeared out of the fog and began to take off the passengers.

MEAGHERS ARE SOUGHT IN VAIN

William J. Meagher and his wife, missing from the steamer Fairfax after its disaster, were well-known residents of Milton.

Mrs. Meagher was a sister of John H. Gavin, deputy director of revenue and finance of Jersey City, N. J.

Her husband's brother, Frank, also a resident of Milton, searched hospitals and checked up with officials, but was unable to locate the couple, who were last seen on deck just before the crash.

Mrs. Meagher's mother is seriously ill at her Jersey City home and the sad news has not been broken to her.

Meagher, who was for years a practicing dentist in Dorchester, and recently retired, married Miss Gavin five years ago.

NO RECORD OF SOS IN LOCAL RADIO OFFICES

Coast Guard Heard a Private Message to S. S. Gloucester, Ending "All O. K."

Whether the Fairfax sent out an S O S was a disputed matter in shipping and coast guard circles today. Investigations are underway by government officials and others.

A local radio station declared today that there is nothing in their log to show that an S O S or other message of appeal came from the Fairfax. His company, he said, had intercepted several messages from the ship, but did not record them.

HEARD "ALL OK"

Commander H. R. Searles, of the Coast Guard, said that so far as he can ascertain, none of the stations in his district picked up an SOS. He said that the U. S. S. Tampa of the Coast Guard, which was cruising off the coast intercepted a private message, evidently from the Fairfax to the Gloucester, her sister ship, ended with "All OK."

Commander P. K. Robottom, of the Navy Yard, declared that some sort of a message came through the Naval radio station. He was today checking up to learn details of it.

SENT PRIVATE RADIO

A. J. Doyle, general agent in Boston of the Merchant & Miners Transportation Co., is declared to have received the first message from the Fairfax.

It read, according to what the Boston Evening American has learned, as follows:

"Anchored off Scituate. Sank oil tanker. Ship badly damaged from accident. Several passengers burned. Will transfer all passengers to the Gloucester returning to Boston. Fairfax will also return as soon as possible. Have doctors and ambulances meet at pier. (Signed) Brooks, Master."

A second explanatory message came at 2 a. m. from D. R. McNeill, vice-president and general manager of the line, who was a passenger on the Fairfax.

This message, in code, addressed to Mr. Doyle, read:

"Are being delayed by fog. Will arrive at 4:15. Eight injured aboard."

No reference to the tanker as having sunk or to its crew was contained in the message.

At 12:30 a. m. a message was received by Mr. Doyle from Capt. A. C. Bunting of the Gloucester reading:

"At 12:30 a. m. taking off Fairfax passengers. Will advise later on decklog."

EVIDENCE OF FIRE

District Fire Chief John J. Kenney made an inspection of the Fairfax at the dock. He declared there was no fatal evidence of fire.

He found all windows and portholes on the port side cracked or broken, he said. The dining saloon was water-soaked nearest the center of the fire, which followed after the crash with the tanker, he said. Guard rails amidships, extending both fore and aft, he found for some distance twisted by the heat of the flames, he added.

OFFICER IN SEA CRASH MISSING

Lieut. Augustus Mulvanity, U. S. N., who journeyed from Norfolk, Va., to Nashua, N. H., to aid his mother, made homeless in the Nashua conflagration, is believed to have perished with his wife and child in the Fairfax disaster.

Lieut. Mulvanity, Mrs. Lucille Mulvanity and their 17-months-old daughter, Eileen, are posted as missing. Many survivors reported witnessing a man and woman, with a child, plunge into the sea with their clothing afire.

The officer's mother was made seriously ill by destruction of her home in the Nashua fire and he obtained leave of absence to visit her with his family.

They left Nashua yesterday morning and sailed on the Fairfax last night. Frantic calls from Nashua relatives to the Merchants & Miners line offices today failed to elicit any reassuring response. The mother has not been informed of the tragedy for she is still ill.

Lieut. Mulvanity was 29 years old and was graduated from the Naval Academy in 1923.

STOCKS DROP IN SELLING WAVE

New York, June 11—Stocks again declined as a heavy selling wave swept over the New York Stock Exchange in the last hour today.

More than 50 pivotal shares dropped $6 to more than $20 a share, several touching new 1930 lows.

The tape ran three-quarters of an hour late. There was a spotty rally near the close, with only a part of the gains being held.

Such issues as Lambert dropped $9, Bethlehem Steel $6, and New York Central $4, to new minimum levels for 1930. U. S. Steel, Radio, American Telephone, and General Electric sold off $4 to $5 a share.

Shares losing $7 to more than $10 included American Can, Johns Manville, Air Reduction, Westinghouse, American Tobacco B, Allied Chemical, and Eastman Kodak. J. I. Case had another of its wide moves, losing more than $20 a share.

OILS EXPLODE, HOUSE ABLAZE

Six painters at work in an apartment being reconstructed over the Standard Lunch, in Central sq., East Boston, narrowly escaped injury when gas ignited and exploded, firing the building this afternoon.

Flames swept the top floors of the three and one-half story brick structure and filled the heart of the East Boston business section with dense smoke.

The fire was extinguished, with a loss of $2000, before it reached the lunch room.

in mere words, were witnessed by both Farrell and Cullen, they said.

"The crew was lacking in discipline and ill-trained for emergency," a joint statement of both charged.

Signalman Farrell described the scenes as follows:

"When the crash came there was a sudden silence, then a terrific explosion. The explosion followed the crash by about two minutes.

Crew Tears Lifebelts Off Women, Hurl Them to Deck

"Instantly there was a flaming volcano from where the tanker had been. It sprayed the entire port side of the Fairfax from stem to stern, from waterline to top deck.

"In an instant pandemonium broke loose. All members of the crew seemed to lose their heads.

"As lifebelts were attached to women and children, many members of the crew tore them off and pushed the victims down.

"I personally saw 11 members of the crew occupying seats in a lifeboat prepared to make a getaway. To have attempted to pull them from the boat would have been suicide. They had armed themselves with hatchets and clubs.

"All members of the crew didn't seem to know what to do. When the crash came the radio antenna fell. It was Radioman J. W. Popp of the U. S. S. Childs, destroyer, who was a passenger, who repaired the damage aloft. He then went to the radio room in an attempt to learn whether an S O S had been sent.

"Navy men aboard the Fairfax rushed into cabins following the collision and placed lifebelts on many women and children. Members of the Fairfax's crew tore them off. The crew in some instances didn't know where the lifebelts were kept.

Cries of Frantic Women Pierce Din and Flames

"The scenes were horrible. Flames and smoke engulfed the port side of the ship and through them came the cries of women. 'What will I do?' and 'Oh, my God!' We could hear them above the shouting of the crazed crew.

"Navy men aboard manned the hose line and extinguished the fire. One sailor—I don't know his name—was a real hero if ever there was one. He moved quickly and quietly about the deck, calling: 'Don't let them jump!' 'Don't let them jump!'

"Many had already jumped into the sea. I saw him climb a deck rail and hang by his toes in an attempt to reach a woman who had gone over the side. I saw him fall.

"Before that, I understand, he had rescued three from the water. Somebody had warned him that his own life was in danger and he answered:

"'To hell with me! Let's get these women.'

"Passengers rushing from staterooms following the crash were met by the wall of flame that shot up from the port side. I think I saw three women go to their deaths in that wall.

"It was the most harrowing experience I was ever in and the actions of the crew were disgraceful."

Radioman Popp was reluctant to tell about the part he played in the work.

"After I established the radio antenna in working order following the crash, I went to the chief radio operator aboard ship and asked him if a distress signal had been sent.

"'Yes,' he said.

"'Did the captain authorize the message?' I asked him, and he did not answer."

Tanker Sounded One Blast—Then Went to Her Doom

Apparently the watch aboard the tanker Pinthis sighted the Fairfax in the fog just before the collision, for she sounded one short, sharp blast on her steam whistle, according to Signalman George Farrell, U. S. N., who was on the deck of the passenger liner.

"I heard one blast from the tanker's whistle and the crash followed immediately," he said. "The explosion. The tanker sank then. It was impossible for anyone on board her to escape death."

SOME OF CREW IN PANIC

Private A. P. Saulnier of Brockton, private in the Marine Corps, was bound for Norfolk. He was with Pharmacist's Mate Frederick H. Jasm of Quincy, who was en route to join the U. S. S. Chaumont for a Asiatic service.

Private Saulnier's story follows:

"With three other men, I was inside near the bow, playing cribbage. There was a heavy jar. It felt as if we had run aground. We rushed on deck. There was a bright glow forward which quickly grew in size. In a few minutes the whole ship appeared to be ablaze except for a small section near us.

"The first blast of flame burned away the ropes to the lifeboats on the port side, so it was impossible to lower them. Everybody rushed to the port side. Officers of the Fairfax and marines kept good order among the passengers as women and children were given places first in the lifeboats. These boats were then lowered to the second deck, but were not launched. The flames seemed to be dying down, and the first emergency seemed to be over.

"Some of the crew during this time seemed to be panic-stricken. Some were dazed. They did not seem to know what to do. The officers and petty officers were wonderfully cool, but the crew did not seem to hear the orders given them.

"One burly member of the crew tried to grab a life preserver away from a woman passenger. The woman battled with him for its possession and succeeded in knocking him down as she finally wrested the preserver from him.

"I have nothing but praise for the officers and had it not been for the Marines and Navy men all would have been much worse. The Marines and Navy men seemed to know exactly what to do. They led the fight against the flames forward and they looked after the safety of the women and children.

"Lights on the ship aft seemed to have gone out. Perhaps it was because of the brilliancy of the blazing oil everywhere, but we could see almost as well as in daylight from the burning gasoline all over the forward part of the ship and stretching away on the water at both sides for hundreds of yards.

HOOVER'S LAW BOARD SPLIT

Washington, June 11—The Wickersham commission of prohibition is at odds over the question of reporting to the President and Congress on the success or failure of prohibition.

This was disclosed today when the Hoban appropriations committee made public evidence on a budget request for $250,000 additional to carry on the commission's work. The committee recommended the fund.

Thus far the commission has proceeded on the theory that its only mission is to fix weaknesses in enforcement and suggest remedies, George W. Wickersham, chairman of the commission, told the committee.

"I would not be candid with you if I did not say there has been a difference of opinion in the commission on that head.

"It has been our view that when we came to a thorough inquiry into the problem of enforcement, if we were convinced prohibition could not be enforced we ought to say so, and if we were convinced it was very problematical as to whether it could be enforced, we ought to say so."

Our shipments of goods to foreign countries for April fell off $100,000,000. We lost nearly $30,000,000 in business with Canada alone in that one month.

This should persuade Washington to think earnestly about the new tariff.

If you don't let others buy from you, you can't sell to them.

In Newark, N. J., Dozier W. Graham, a Negro candidate for United States senator, and a Communist, has for his motto, "Down with the Government."

Accused of shouting, "Fight the police! Revolt!" he is on trial in the court of common pleas. Some witnesses for the Communist candidate were not allowed to testify because they were atheists and would not take the oath.

Atheists, the judge said, cannot be allowed to affirm.

That privilege is for those who believe in a God, but don't like to use His name in swearing.

A man who does not believe in God necessarily does not believe in hell. Such a man might perhaps affirm almost anything.

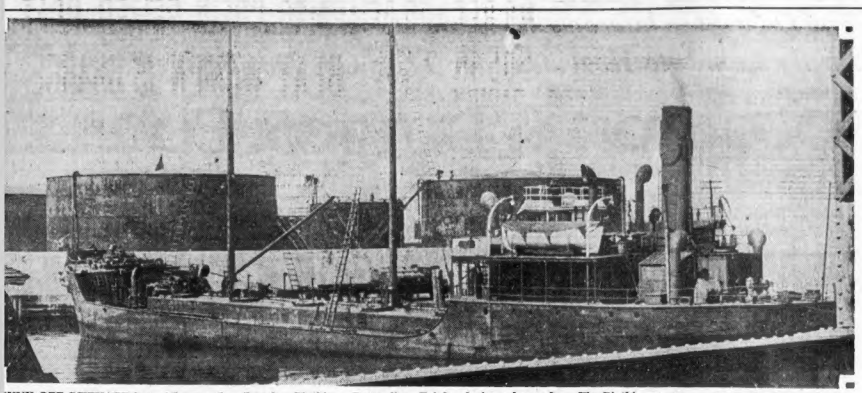
RESCUED PASSENGERS AND SHIPS IN TRAGEDY OFF SCITUATE



SUNK OFF SCITUATE last night was the oil tanker Pinthis, all of her crew apparently perishing when the torn and burning ship plunged beneath the waves. The Pinthis collided with the Boston liner Fairfax during a heavy fog. The Pinthis was on her way to Chelsea to unload her cargo. The Fairfax was bound for Baltimore with passengers and cargo.

MERCHANTS AND MINERS liner Fairfax of Boston, which sank the tanker Pinthis off Scituate last night. Passengers on the Fairfax were transferred to her sister ship Gloucester and taken to Boston. Many of the passengers and of the crew were sprayed with burning oil and leaped into the ocean. Others were burned, but stayed on the ship. The Fairfax was headed for the course outside of Cape Cod, while the Pinthis was heading direct for Boston harbor from the Cape Cod canal.

GAPING HOLE in bow of the liner Fairfax, photographed as she docked in Boston today, was graphic evidence of how the Merchants and Miners liner collided with and sank the oil tanker Pinthis off Scituate last night with heavy loss of life. The hole measures 10 feet by 10 feet and is on the starboard side. (Staff photo.)

CHIEF RADIO OPERATOR J. W. Popp of the U. S. S. Childs was another passenger on the Fairfax. Popp was returning to duty on his ship when the liner ran down the ill-fated oil tanker Pinthis. Several other navy men were passengers. (Staff photo.)

U. S. Marines rescued from the Boston liner Fairfax after the crash off Scituate last night praised the coolness of the women passengers. They are Sergts. Harry Kipp and Harry Hutchkoff. In back are Frederick H. Jaem of Quincy and Arthur Saulnier of Brockton.

IONA BROWN SARAH POYNTON

Bound for their home in Washington, D. C., when the collision occurred, were Miss Iona Brown and Miss Sarah Poynton. The The most thrilling experience of their lives was the disaster, but one which they wish to forget, the girls said. They will go on by train.

These two travelers were also taken off the Fairfax during the fog and returned to Boston on the Gloucester. They are Miss Mabel Hermanson and Miss Ruth Brown of Newcastle, Pa. The two companions were exceptionally cool when the crash occurred. (Staff photos.)

Women Kept Courage While Death Loomed

"The women, God bless 'em," greeted like majors, A. E. Abbott of Quincy, bronzed first sergeant of marines, said in describing a four-hour battle against fire and deadly gas as flames blanketed over the Fairfax almost instantly after the collision.

"With a terrible death staring them in the face," he said, "they assembled, gasping for breath, in the stern of the boat while the apparently impossible task of saving the ship was undertaken by all aboard her.

"Huddled in a group with unconscious forms all about them, they refused to become panic-stricken and thus allowed all the men to work in putting out the fire."

Sergt. Abbot praised also the spirit of the men passengers. After the first blast they set to work, manned hose and made no effort to get to lifeboats until the Gloucester was ready to make the transfer.

Taking no credit for himself, Sergt. Abbot told of the heroic efforts of four other marines and six navy officers, who, he said really saved the ship. But for the efforts of these men the Fairfax would have been lost and all aboard her burned to death or drowned, he added.

The battle against the flames lasted for four hours. The whole port side was enveloped in an instant. All the passengers on that side of the boat rushed to starboard to escape the fire and smoke.

The service men segregated the women and children and directed the work of fighting the fire.

The rescue efforts of the Gloucester's crew, Sergt. Abbott said, were efficiently and thoroughly carried out. First aid was given to the burned and injured. Stretchers were taken or passed to the Fairfax and the more unfortunate of the passengers transferred to the Gloucester, where they were given emergency treatment.

After the Gloucester had arrived here and its weary cargo had gone to hotels, Sergt. Abbott went in search of his fellow marines to be sure they were made comfortable.

Approaching a hotel clerk, he said: "I have no money. I left $400 with the purser when I boarded the Fairfax last night. But I want my buddies upstairs taken care of and I'll get the money to pay for it."

BRIDAL COUPLE DONE WITH SEA

"It was certainly a thrilling experience and an eventful start on a honeymoon."

So declared Ralhp H. Howes, Belfast, Me., business man, who with his bride of Monday was rescued from the Fairfax.

Mr. and Mrs. Howes were seen by a Boston Evening American reporter at breakfast at Hotel Essex today.

"Of course our plans are upset," said the bridegroom. "We will remain in Boston for a few days. We will not continue our honeymoon by boat to Norfolk or anywhere else. We are through with ocean traveling.

"We were taken off at 12:30 oclock this morning. The excitement that broke out at first had subsided somewhat and most of the passengers, knowing that they were practically safe, calmly awaited being taken off the Fairfax.

"Mrs. Howes remained cool, despite the excitement. I tried to, but it was a job. We were below when the crash came. The Fairfax officers and crew displayed the utmost efficiency under the circumstances. We all owe our lives to them."

Mrs. Howes was Miss Carrie Greenlaw, of Bath, Me. She had little to add to her husband's story.

Tercentenary Pilgrimages—No. 3

HOME OF MAJ. JOHN BRADFORD—KINGSTON

BUILT IN 1674 and restored by the Jones River Club of Kingston, the home of Maj. John Bradford has weathered the centuries and impresses the visitor with its austere simplicity. The old leaded glass is still serving in the windows and the well sweep in the yard is worn with use.

This old house is interesting because it was for years the repository of the early history of Plymouth Plantation in the original manuscript form.

Written by Governor Bradford from his notes beginning about 1630, this history had an adventurous career before finally reaching print. For a century nearly all trace of the writing was lost. It was prepared by Governor Bradford with the utmost care.

MANUSCRIPT MISSING

Samuel Bradford, great grandson, tells us that in 1705 the document was given by the governor to his son, Maj. William Bradford, and by him to his son, Maj. John Bradford. Thomas Prince secured the record from Maj. John Bradford, as did Judge Sewell, for purposes of chronology. John Bradford authorized Prince to place the history in his collection of Prints and Manuscripts, asking only that he (Bradford), "might have the perusal of it while he lived." Prince kept the treasure in the tower of the Old South Church in Boston, which was used by the British as a riding school during the seige.

After the evacuation, the manuscript and Bradford Letter Book were missing. The Letter Book was found in a grocery store in Nova Scotia some years later.

The history of Plymouth was supposed to have been destroyed, but a scholar in 1855 pursuing an ecclesiastical subject, recognized a quotation from a "Manuscript History of the Plantation of Plymouth" located in the Fulham Library, in England.

FOLLOWED TO LONDON

Brought to the attention of the Massachusetts Historical Society the clue was followed to London and the original document finally transported to Boston in 1897.

Governor Bradford lived in Kingston. The present Bradford home stands on a high embankment overlooking the river. During the Indian War with King Philip, it was burned, but not beyond repair. The house had been abandoned by Maj. John Bradford, who had gone to the garrison house across the river.

He returned, though, with some neighbors, to secure his belongings, and as he neared the home, saw smoke rising. He knew that the red men were to blame. He and his friends ran boldly toward the house, but the Indians did not heed, and firing his gun, Major Bradford saw one fall.

Later, when the war was over, an Indian came to him and claimed to be the man the major had shot, showing three scars.

Kingston is on the road from Boston to Plymouth, just outside the town where the Pilgrims landed on Plymouth Rock. It lies on the old Massachusetts Bay Path, now State Highway No. 3.

Tomorrow: The old Browne House, just outside Watertown Square.

Vorenberg Named to Safety Committee

Felix Vorenberg, Boston merchant, and Z. Marshall Crane of Dalton have been appointed to the executive committee of the Governor's committee on street and highway safety by Governor Allen. They fill vacancies caused by the drafting of Frederick H. Payne of Greenfield and A. C. Ratshesky to be assistant secretary of war and minister to Czecho-Slovakia, respectively.

James D. Henderson, Boston real estate man, was also named by the Governor to the general committee of the highway body.

Why Women Wear Them

For thirty years, by spoken and written word I have told the public of the importance of foot comfort for general health, tranquil nerves and physical efficiency.

And yet I know that more women have been converted to Arch Preserver Shoes by the testimony of their friends than by any effort of mine. One friend says "I couldn't get along without Arch Preserver Shoes." Another says "My feet ached and were sore all the time until I started wearing Arch Preserver Shoes. Now I forget my feet entirely."

And thus the story of Arch Preserver Shoe comfort is spread, to a wider and wider circle each day. It is a simple non-technical story of comfort and efficiency — without sacrifice of style.

The new summer models are in. It will delight you to see them.

FOES OF TREATY ARE HOPEFUL

Washington, June 11 (INS)—President Hoover found himself involved in a controversy with the Senate today that goes deep into the constitution and the basic powers of the presidency.

His refusal, through Secretary of State Stimson, to disclose to the Senate foreign relations committee the secret correspondence concerning the naval treaty is responsible for a resolution that was being drafted today challenging the power of the executive to withhold documents. It will be adopted by the committee.

The belief prevails that Mr. Hoover will stand by his decision not to submit the correspondence to the committee. In that case there appears but little the committee can do, but the treaty foes were hopeful of blocking Senate action until November.

WHEELER BACK TO BALTIMORE

Nathaniel Herbert Wheeler, alleged swindler of women, was today formally ordered removed to Baltimore to face trial by Judge James A. Lowell in Federal court.

This affirms the order issued by U. S. Commissioner Edwin C. Jenney following a hearing yesterday.

Chief Deputy U. S. Marshal James A. Tighe said Wheeler would be sent to Baltimore tonight in custody of two deputies.

Wheeler was indicted in Baltimore last month on charges of using the mails to defraud. It is alleged he induced Mrs. Hattie E. Thompson to give him $14,000 to invest in mining stock. In Boston federal court yesterday she identified him.

Today, in the real estate columns of the Classified Ads, you will find scores of opportunities for profitable investment.

Thirst for Culture First in College Boys' Desires

Middletown, Ct., June 11 (AP)—A desire for general culture was given by Wesleyan University undergraduates during a recent survey, the results of which were announced today, as their principal reason for seeking a college education.

The development of the mind was listed as their second chief aim; development of friendships and associations came third, while practical considerations—preparations for a definite career and a desire to increase their earning capacity—followed.

Industry and application were given by the students as the factors they considered most important for achieving success in college. Intellectual ability and a pleasing personality, the students replied, also contribute.

Letters From American Readers

Irish Not Barred From Conference of Cities"

Editor Boston American:

Harry Franklin, "Good Will Ambassador" and mayor of Cambridge, Eng., in now on the "wide expanse of waters" and will arrive in the Daughter City, Cambridge, Mass., the latter part of the week. The writer, whose ancestors came from Ireland, has been flooded with letters with the query: "How about the Irish mayors?" A little bit of Blarney would season the "Conference of Cities." Although I have never kissed the Blarney stone, I would state that every city and town on the face of this green earth has been bid for the presence of their deputies to sit in at the Boston "Conference of Cities" in 1930.

Says Moral Forces Should Stand Back of Hultman

Editor Boston American:

Police Commr. Hultman merits the commendation and backing of all the moral and Christian forces of Greater Boston.

The cynical may reply, "he is only doing his duty," and the obstructionist may say, "he is only making a sensational splurge and will soon cool off and settle into the old, compromising way of his predecessors."

But it means much for an officer to do his honest duty in Boston, and, to the writer's mind, Mr. Hultman has given unmistakable evidence of exceptional efficiency and of his unswerving determination to stand four square.

Good citizens who believe in law and its honest enforcement are altogether too reluctant or thoughtless about expressing their appreciation of and encouragement to a faithful official.

Let all temperance and Christian men and women approve, encourage and back Commissioner Hultman in his good work against lawlessness and vice.

No stronger evidence should be needed to prove that the police commissioner is striking telling blows against the liquor interests than the hasty, vigorous disapproval and criticism of Conrad W. Crocker, paid attorney of the "Liberal Civic League, which is simply a local branch of the association against prohibition."

This alone should be sufficient to convince friends of law and order and all who are opposed to the liquor iniquity, whether flowing from the speakeasy or the legalized liquor traffic, of their unmistakable duty.

GRANT ROGERS,
Brighton.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

Editor Boston American:

How many people passing City Hall in Boston stop and just think before the statue of Benjamin Franklin?

They have been cleaning up that statue lately. But back of that statue is a man whose achievements cleaned up many trying events in the revolutionary period.

It would do us some good to read more about "Ben" than we ever read before. He was not altogether a saint, but he had wonderful ability, at a critical time in the changing scenes in this republic.

He is a striking example of great citizenship. It is good to have his figure in front of City Hall. He knew citizenship in its narrow and broader sense.

He created the post office system of America, he put advertising on a business basis, founded the Philadelphia Public Hospital, and many other things. Every growing youngster of this generation would do well to read these words: "For 40 years he gave the constant effort of his life to his country, and during that time no taint of selfish action can be laid to his charge." Those are the words of the late Elbert Hubbard.

RUNAWAY AUTO CRASHES BABY

Beverly, June 11—A runaway automobile, without operator, took a mad backward plunge down hill on Federa st. today, continuing on to Rantoul st. and crashing into a baby carriage, in which Howard Tielis, two, of Rantoul st., was being wheeled by his brother, Kenneth.

The baby was tossed from the carriage and sent spinning to the curb, fracturing his skull. Kenneth escaped with cuts and bruises.

Both are at Beverly Hospital, Howard in critical condition.

The car came to a stop after crashing into a street pole. Louis D. Perkins of Eastern ave., under whose name it is registered, told police he had parked the car on Rantoul st. while he entered a nearby house.

TARIFF FATE UP FRIDAY

Washington, June 11—Despite his defiance, it was indicated today the Senate lobby committee will continue its probe of Bishop James Cannon's lobbying and political activities.

An agreement was reached yesterday for a final vote at 2 p. m. on "hoodoo day" in the Senate, the measure. They frankly admit, however, that neither has disclosed his final decision.

After being closeted together for an hour at the capitol, Reed and Grundy held a conference with Secretary Mellon, who has let it be known that he believes the bill will not adequately protect the aluminum, iron and glass industries of Pennsylvania.

A final poll of the Senate disclosed 47 for the bill and 46 against, with Reed, Grundy and Senator Bratton (D), of New Mexico, undecided. If all three vote against the conference report, the bill is dead for this session, at least. If one of them votes for the report and two against, Vice-President Curtis would break the 48-48 tie with a vote for the bill.

Where the result is in doubt because of the indecision of the two Republican senators from Pennsylvania.

Immediately after this agreement was adopted, it was announced that the House would dispose of the bill on Saturday, if the Senate adopts the conference reports. There is no doubt about the House.

Endorse Doherty as Special Justice

At a meeting of the Bar Association of Waltham, Watertown and Weston, held in the Waltham District Court, it was voted to indorse the candidacy of Anthony L. Doherty, of Lincoln, for appointment as special justice of the Concord District Court.

Be sure to ask at any drug or department store for Othine double strength. It's always sold with guarantee of money back if it does not fade out even the worst freckles and give you a lovely, milk-white complexion.

QUEEN MARIE IS ON WAY BACK TO RUMANIA

Munich, Bavaria, June 11 (AP)—Dowager Queen Marie boarded the Orient express this morning en route back to Bucharest where she was scheduled to arrive at 6:30 p. m. The Rumanian minister to Berlin was in attendance at the Munich station.

Bucharest, Rumania, June 11 (AP)—Renewed efforts are being made to bring about a reconciliation of the Princess Helene with King Carol.

It has been stressed to the princess that it is the deepest wish of the Rumanian people that she and Carol be crowned together in October, and that she allow annulment of the divorce granted her after his desertion and exile in Paris with the titian-haired Mme. Magda Lupescu.

Meanwhile, King Carol is seeking the guiding hand of a premier who will form a cabinet and undertake actual administration.

Retiring Premier Mironescue today informed the foreign press King Carol desired to deliver personally a message to them this afternoon.

Carol's Foes Are Kept Under Close Watch

Vienna, June 11 (AP)—Bucharest telegrams today said widespread measures of security had been taken by military authorities. Houses where participants in the moves that caused Carol's exile in 1926 reside are being watched closely.

Rumania to Seek World War Benefits, Says Carol

Paris, June 11 (AP)—King Carol of Rumania, in a statement made in Bucharest to the special correspondent of Le Matin, said Rumania expected to take the place in European affairs to which it was entitled by benefits reaped from the World War victory.

"I expect my first ministry will devote itself especially to improving the economic situation. This country has resources and they must be exploited. More than any other thing, this merits confidence, and everything must be done to maintain it.

"We need help from our friends and we shall show that we are worthy of it."

WILD CATS OF BEACON HILL

On the "other side" of Beacon Hill, in and out of the dark alleys off Phillips and Garden sts., flit the homeless cats of this Bohemian quarter. These tramp cats of the Hill are distinctly marked by several generations of inbreeding—usually white with black tails, sometimes a grayish dirty white with similar black tails. A dozen old Toms have roamed this quarter for years. They live in deserted sheds and cellars. Foraging by day among the ash cans and garbage pails, they do fairly well; tidbits are thrown to them occasionally, but they sniff suspiciously before they bite. Unsympathetic tenants have tried poison on them before. These felines are gaunt, rangy and independent. On warm June nights occasionally an elegant mouser from the environs of Chestnut or Mt. Vernon sts. will wander over. If a female she may pass muster—but the strange Tom is quickly challenged to battle. It is soon over. The aristocrat is made to know his place. Back he bareft of fur, a much bedraggled, but wiser cat.

AN OLD TIMER

The veteran of the breed has one black eye which gives him an expression of villainy. His children and grandchildren are legion, and like the famous brand of breakfast food — no human hand has ever touched him. Cat fanciers have tried all sorts of wiles to induce him to friendship, but he'll have none of it. Likewise he has vanquished his enemies, those who would dispose of him with a barrage of old shoes or empty bottles. Old Nick is his name. Nick's shattering yowl can be heard for the distance of a square block. The old timer's army of descendants assist in the chorus. From surrounding windows are hurled a shower of missiles . . . sometimes a serenader is knocked from an ash can or fence, but Nick always survives. A Hill legend has it that Old Nick bears a charmed life.

Head May Lead G. O. P.

Washington, June 10 (US)—Walter W. Head, Omaha banker, was being discussed in G. O. P. circles today as a possible choice by President Hoover for the chairmanship of the Republican National Committee.

PATRICK OF RICE CASE FAME IN NEW FIGHT

Albany, N. Y., June 11 (AP)—Having won two major battles—the first to escape the electric chair, the second for freedom from prison—Albert T. Patrick is now engaged in a third—for the right to practice in the federal courts. He is here studying the records of his case.

From 1900 to 1912 Patrick's name was as familiar in the headlines as is Babe Ruth's today. Patrick, former New York city lawyer, was accused of causing the death by chloroform of William Marsh Rice, 82, millionaire, found dead September 23, 1900. The indictment charged Patrick with having instigated Rice's valet, Charles R. Jones, to administer the chloroform.

Patrick was convicted of first degree murder. Five days later while confined in the Tombs, he married Mrs. Addie M. Francis of New York city. On May 8 he was sentenced to death after the Court of Appeals sustained the verdict of the general sessions jury. Patrick finally took his case to the United States Supreme Court, and on December 20, 1906, Gov. Frank W. Higgins commuted the death sentence.

For six years Patrick bombarded governors with applications for a pardon, and on November 27, '912, received one from Gov. Dix.

Ripley's Word Hunt Latest Indoor Sport

Everyone is word hunting now! The Ripley "Word Hunt," now a daily feature of the Boston Evening American, has set thousands of New England families eagerly scanning the Classified Ad pages for descriptions of the ten daily "Believe It Or Not" pictures.

With the popularity of Ripley's pictures and the $2500 in cash prizes to reward skillful hunters, it isn't to be wondered that a new indoor sport has been created overnight.

Look in today's issue for the ten Ripley pictures. Study them closely, then turn to the Classified Ad page and seek the descriptions that fit the pictures. They are hidden, of course, but if you are keen-eyed you will find all ten. The rules will tell you exactly what to do. And they are simple and easy to understand.

Just imagine what a wonderful vacation you could have if you won the first prize of $1000, or any one of the other 99 big cash prizes. Start today. Remember, too, that the "Word Hunt" will be continued in the Boston Sunday Advertiser.

GUY CURRIER, IN LONDON, WEDS SHEILA LOCKE

Guy Currier, Jr., Boston banker, was married today in London to Miss Sheila Locke, adopted daughter of the late novelist, William J. Locke of London.

Mrs. Locke gave her daughter in marriage. Lieut. A. C. Hyde of the Royal Air Corps attended Mr. Currier.

The couple will spend their honeymoon on the Continent and take up their residence here.

The engagement was announced some time ago, and the date for the wedding set for today. Mr. Locke, before he died, expressed the wish that there be no postponement.

Mrs. Guy Currier, Jr., prior to her adoption by Mr. and Mrs. Locke, was Miss Sheila Baines, daughter of Alfred Sandeles Baines. She was taken under the wing of the novelist when she was but 4 years of age, her parents agreeing. Later the father instituted suit to recover custody but the girl had arrived of age and expressed her desire to remain with the Lockes, who had formally adopted her.

Mr. Locke, who was greatly devoted to his adopted daughter, took great interest in the plans for her wedding and up to the time of his recent death was in constant conference with her.

Kissed Twice in 16 Years of Wedded Life

New York, June 11—Two kisses in 16 years of married life do not make it worth while to go on trying to love one's husband, Mrs. Bella Goodman, former concert singer, indicated yesterday in Supreme Court, Manhattan, when she began an action for annulment of her marriage.

All Set for Harvard Week

Hasty Pudding Spread Will Be Held Wednesday With Reunions Thursday

NEXT WEEK IS FAIR Harvard week. The lads and lassies will don their best toggery and saunter Cambridgeward to uphold the fine old traditions of our beloved Harvard. The outstanding social feature is the Hasty Pudding spread on Tuesday where the young folks will gather at the clubhouse for luncheon, after which they all wander over to the Stadium for the exercises.

ALWAYS AN AMUSING EPISODE is the graduates and alumni marching in fantastic costumes and there is much gaiety and throwing of confetti. The fair sex sit on the embankment and toss streamers of gayly colored paper until the world takes on a rainbow aspect. Twilight comes and the girls stroll back on the arms of their beaus to Beck Hall, where supper is served. A platform is built under a marquee where to the strains of spirited tunes youth dances the 'wee sma' hours awa'. At nine the Harvard Glee Club sings in the college yard and boys and girls walk arm in arm through the dusk of a summer's evening in the shadows of Harvard's stately old edifices.

ON WEDNESDAY, THE REUNION of Harvard's classes of 1896 to 1926 takes place with luncheons at various places, at the Weld Boat Club and dining halls of several schools. This is one of the important events and families gather and friends meet to attend the Harvard-Yale baseball game. The classes are seated in together and it is quite a touching reunion of old schoolmates.

Thursday is Commencement in the yard. President Lowell makes his speech, announcing the donations during the year. The Harvard Alumni Glee Club sings and the boys receive their coveted sheepskins. Friday the gay party breaks up, some to go to New Haven to the boat races, others to go back to their homes and dream about the good old college days.

MR. AND MRS. POTTER PALMER of Chicago are among those arriving at the Ritz-Carlton. Mrs. Demarest Lloyd of Washington is also staying at this hotel.

Mrs. C. Briggs Plant to Open Her Cohasset Garden on Friday

AMONG THE COHASSET gardens to be shown on Friday, June 13, is the new garden, scarcely completed, of Mrs. C. Briggs Plant. This garden is of much interest because in every way it is entirely original, designed and executed without the aid of a landscape gardener, or contractor. Although an amateur, Mrs. Plant in a year's time has converted a treeless hay field into a most beautiful garden with a setting of lovely trees, which for design and perfection of detail is conceded to be of rare excellence. Mrs. Plant was famous at one time for her horses in the show ring but has transferred her affections to her gardens.

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES A. WELCH, 2d (Ruth Yerxa), left Marblehead yesterday for New York, where they are to sail on the Bremen today. They will meet Mr. Welch's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. E. Sohier Welch, in Kiel, where the brothers are to take part in the boat races.

Says Hoover Blameless in Navy Row

Jane Addams Gives Views at League for Peace and Freedom Meeting

By NANCY BREWSTER

Holding President Hoover in no fault whatsoever for the unpopularity of "that naval thing," Miss Jane Addams, foremost American social worker, refused to commit herself on a query put to her, "Is Hoover losing his influence?"

Asked by a woman in the audience at a meeting conducted by the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom at the West Roxbury home of Mrs. John S. Codman, at which Miss Addams was the principal guest and speaker, the organizer and founder of Chicago's Hull House declared that she didn't know because she wasn't "close enough to the situation."

"A GREAT MISTAKE"

Miss Addams said she knew President Hoover during the food administration, had the highest regard and respect for him, but didn't know if he was losing influence.

"Just now I think that naval thing is unpopular. But it is not President Hoover's fault."

During the course of her extemporaneous talk, she flatly denounced compulsory military training in schools and colleges or in the public schools, holding the whole idea as "a great mistake of course."

As for the battleships, Miss Addams would tuck them away safely in a "nice harbor to rust into disuse," she said. Personally she felt they all should be destroyed, but any public advocacy of battleship destruction antagonized the sense of thrift of the general public, she maintained.

IMMIGRATION PROBLEM

She told the women that now was the time to get busy and get their philosophy of peace and freedom across. One of the most troubling problems of the country, she pointed out, was the question of immigration.

This comment followed the plea made to the members to urge President Hoover to appoint Grace Abbot as Secretary of Labor.

Miss Addams complimented Mrs. Abbot highly as a woman of ability and knowledge and fundamental grounding, stating she approved of a woman in the Hoover cabinet.

The meeting was for members only, taking the form of a picnic supper held on the Woodland estate of Mrs. Codman.

Colonial Atmosphere Prevails Today at G. O. P. Clubhouse

Eight women, garbed as women of early American fashion plates, will sit around a dinner table at the Women's Republican Club of Massachusetts tonight, a table modeled in every detail of colonial days, at 6 p. m., to partake of a menu also in keeping with "those days," after having acted as hostesses for the club's participation in Beacon Hill Day celebration.

If anyone wants to see a typical colonial dinner setting, she needs only to visit 46 Beacon st., and she will retrace the spirit of those pioneer days.

The table and its interesting appointment are to be on display from 1 p. m. today through the dinner hour, during which time the club will open to the general public for inspection and visiting. Mrs. Lincoln S. Patterson, chairman of the hostesses, has included members of the club's board of governors, the Tercentenary committee of the club and other club members in her group. There will be music later in the afternoon, and at 8 tonight Mrs. George J. Putnam will give her illustrated lecture.

WHICH KIND OF FEET HAS your child?

Crooked toes, weak arches, bulging, shapeless heels? Or fine, straight toes, beautifully formed, strong arches, and heels that seem to mold themselves comfortably into shoes?

Now is the time to consider the future of your child's feet—now, while his feet are growing. Now is the time to correct any foot ills he may have. Now is the time to have him begin wearing Coward shoes—and no others.

For Coward shoes are designed over special lasts—designed to correct foot ills, give comfort, and guide little feet to proper development. Their snug-fitting heel, firm arch support, and roomy toe space will train feet—as no other shoe will—will guide them to growth and fine foot health.

Crooked Ankles. Caused by incorrect shoes.

Picking Cottons Fashionable Pastime

From Paris Bureau, Boston Evening American.

Paris, June 11.

PICKING COTTON as the fabric for your afternoon or informal evening frock will prove you to be a person of discrimination and good clothes sense. For cotton materials, with organdie especially emphasized, are among the season's leaders, and every collection has one, two or even more models of this crisp, friendly fabric that is so demure and pleasing to wear.

Some of the models are made on clever, sophisticated lines, making it possible for the more mature woman to indulge in her desire for an organdie frock without having the idea that she is trying to appear coy or kittenish, for organdie is a fabric that has always been associated with the younger generation, hence its label "girlish."

The model shown here is by Lanvin, who uses organdie in aquamarine blue with a delicate tracery of pink embroidery. Looped bretelles at either shoulder, reaching down to the hips, are edged with tiny fluted ruffles. The double flounces of the bouffant skirt are cut in points and form very irregular hemlines. This silk suit is liked here for cooler days, and for the suit shown here today Mirande has chosen black ottoman silk with white coindots, and trimmed it with a generous border of black fox. The short, flaring jacket fastens with one button.

36 FACE TRIAL AS 32 DIE OF POISON RUM

New York, June 11 (AP)—Accused of selling poisonous liquor, 36 proprietors, bartenders and bouncers from 'smoke' shops along the Bowery were under arrest today.

Spurred by 32 deaths within a month from poisonous alcohol and other deadly concoctions dispensed to lowest habitues at 15 and 20 cents a drink, Mal Maurice Campbell prohibition administrator, let 30 federal agents in a series of raids yesterday on the drinking haunts of the down-and-outers.

The agents, dressed in shabby clothes and with two-day beards on their faces, visited drug stores, paint shops and speakeasies, purchasing samples of "smoke," so-called because of its clouded, milky white appearance, and arrested the owners and employes.

Maj. Campbell said analysis showed some of the seized liquor to be denatured alcohol of the kind used as an antifreeze mixture in automobile radiators. Still another proved to be pure carbon and alcohol which he said has no disagreeable odor and is not readily identified.

In a paint store the raiders purchased a half pint bottle labeled "denatured alcohol poison for 25 cents." The proprietor and his wife were arrested.

A drum and 500 bottles labeled "denatured alcohol were seized in a Bowery drug store.

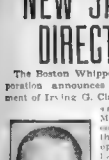
AUTOMOBILE NEWS

CLARK NAMED NEW SALES DIRECTOR

The Boston Whippet-Knight Corporation announces the appointment of Irving G. Clark as general sales director. Mr. Clark will concentrate on the retail sales operation. He has worked up through the ranks of motor car merchandising.



I. G. Clark

In a recent interview, Mr. Clark said:

"In the Willys Six DeLuxe sedan, Willys-Overland has again demonstrated what can be expected when master craftsmen are given full sway in the production of a motor car.

"The unusual 65 horsepower development and speed attainment of 72 miles an hour of this new automobile are matched by a beauty of design and attention to detail.

"A decided streamline effect has been attained by the trim, narrower radiator, low sweeping body lines and carefully tailored rear quarters. Power is suggested in every line and this is upheld by exhaustive tests in which performance comparable only with that of much more expensive cars was obtained.

"From dead stop, the DeLuxe Sedan with its 65 horsepower engine, flashes into movement that may be extended from 5 to 50 miles an hour in 21 seconds. It is capable of a speed of 48 miles an hour in second and 73 miles in high, assuring mastery of any traffic emergency.

"Wire wheels are standard equipment on the DeLuxe Sedan model, with the spare wheel and tire mounted in the right front fender well. Trunk rack also is included."

Auto Chief 'Matched'

U. S. Rubber Tire Fleet Off on Trip

Phoenix, Ari., June 11—Having rounded out six months of operations on the sun-baked, gritty lava roads adjacent to this city, the tire test fleet of the United States Rubber Co left here for Michigan where it will continue operations throughout the summer, returning to Arizona again next fall.

More than 2,000,000 tire test miles have been piled up here since last November, when the fleet arrived according to William Thompson fleet manager, and hundreds of experimental tires shipped from the factory at Detroit had been put through tests ranging from a few hundred miles to many thousands.

CAMBRIDGE HAS DISPLAY

The latter list includes fire apparatus, police patrols, ambulances, bottlers' bodies, school buses, vans, furniture bodies, panel milk side delivery bodies, etc, etc.

There are 6-wheel units and trailers capable of carrying a pay load of three tons. There is a display of mechanidal improvements, industrial motors, power take-off units, cutaway power display units, and last but not least, a new AA 157-inch chassis.

STUDEBAKER WON'T QUIT

Back in 1928, a Studebaker President roadster ran 30,000 miles at an average speed of 68.3 miles per hour, a record that has never been touched by any other make of automobile. This car has been taken off the road and placed in the Museum of Transportation at South Bend, Ind. More interesting, however, is the record of a sister car that finished only three minutes behind its team-mate, having reeled off 30,000 miles in 23,329 minutes, says Gerald Sullivan, manager Studebaker Sales Co. of Boston.

Instead of going into honorable retirement, this car has remained in service, and has recently been admitted to membership in the One Hundred Thousand Miles Club At 99,827 miles (the speedometer has been certified by the Stewart-Warner Corp) this car climbed to the summit of Stone Mountain, the famous sculptured peak near Atlanta, Ga. With the speedometer showing 107,000 miles the car attained an average speed of 102 miles per hour in a test run at New Orleans.

Oakland Takes 15 Men Up Hill in High

Carrying fifteen men, whose combined weight almost equalled that of the car itself, an Oakland Eight sedan recently made a remarkable "stunt" demonstration of high gear pulling power on the famous Kettle Hill at Altoona, Pa., according to F. C. Sibley, manager, Oakland Motor Co.

Crowded inside and perched outside on fenders, bumpers and running boards, the fifteen passengers represented a dead weight of 2450 pounds, which flattened down the springs until the rear fenders touched the tires every time the car encountered a road bump.

But, despite the drag, the 85 horsepower Oakland made a standing start, climbed the hill in high gear, and "went over the top" at a speed of 40 miles per hour. The Oakland was a strictly stock model.

Durant Preparing New 4-Door Coach

Durant dealers throughout the country will shortly place on display the new four-door coach, the latest addition to the Durant line and the only car of its type on the market, according to announcement by R. T. Hodgkins, general sales manager.

"Our factories are now in full production of the 6-14 coach, which has resulted from the urgent requests of many dealers and distributors and our own recognition of today's buying tendencies," Mr. Hodgkins said. "In this car we believe we can offer a degree of quality hitherto unknown in a highly competitive field."

Packard Sales Mount After Price Slash

Following reduction of $400 in the price of the Packard standard cars the Packard Motor Company of Boston and its dealers have been deluged with business.

W. P. Naylor, vice-president of the company, confidently expects the Packard organization will sell 250 cars at retail in the first week following the price reduction announcement.

Now that Your First Choice Car Costs so Little More . .

Why buy a lesser car?

Forget "list prices" and get the facts. Get the actual costs—trade-in, financing and extras considered. You will be astonished at how little, if anything, more it costs for the outstanding advantages of the Essex Challenger.

The ESSEX Challenger is a SUPER-SIX

Essex costs so little more—and yet it is a big car, with big car comforts and advantages. You ride with ease and plenty of lounging room. You have the security of the biggest, finest car.

Greatest of all, you have the pride and satisfaction of ownership expressed in these letters—typical of thousands.

"In ten years I have owned thirty automobiles, from $1,000 to $6,000. My Essex Challenger does all that any of them did. It is roomy and comfortable. The motor is a wonder. In 7000 miles I have not spent a cent for service."

"I used to own a light car that did pretty well in tire, oil and fuel economy. But when I escaped frequent outlay for repairs or adjustments, I considered myself lucky. Since owning my Essex I have learned repair expense is not a matter of luck. With its wonderful performance, it is—truly the greatest value among cars."

Come examine and ride in the New Essex Challenger. See how little more it costs. Then no lesser car can satisfy.

LOBBY PROBERS 'SURPRISED' BY BISHOP CANNON

Washington, June 11 (AP)—Walking in on the Senate lobby Committee as abruptly as he walked out last week, Bishop James Cannon, Jr., answered questions today on activities of the Southern Methodist church but persisted in refusal to undergo examination on his 1928 anti-Smith campaigning.

The bishop surprised the committee which had been called to determine what it could about his defiance. The investigators decided to give him a chance to testify and to consider their future course only after hearing his attitude.

Senator Walsh, Democrat, Montana, brought up the matter of anti-Smith funds obtained by Cannon from E. C. Jameson, New York capitalist, but the witness referred again and again to his objections to answering questions on his political work.

"Do you care to say anything about the $48,000 that was not reported?" asked Walsh.

Senator Robinson, Republican, Indiana, sided with Cannon, saying he wondered what that has to do with the lobbying investigation.

RECALLS HUSTON CASE.

As Cannon refused to answer a question of Senator Blaine, Republican, Wisconsin, about the 1928 Virginia anti-Smith funds, Chairman Caraway said the objection of the bishop would be considered by the committee.

"In the Huston matter had Mr. Huston made such answers we never would have been able to go to the source of his fund," observed Blaine.

Claudius Huston, chairman of the Republican national committee, was examined by the lobby investigators several months ago in connection with money received by him for the Tennessee River Improvement Association.

"This has nothing to do with lobbying nor with the Huston case," asserted Robinson, protesting Blaine's questioning.

At this point an elderly woman walked to the committee table and said:

DENIES "CONTEMPT."

Bishop Cannon read a prepared statement asserting he intended "no contempt of the Senate" in withdrawing from the committee hearing last week.

"I intended no discourtesy," he said. "I certainly thought I had the right.

"I am here again today as a voluntary witness concerning the activities of the board of the M. E. Church South."

The questioning veered to the 1928 activities. Senator Caraway said E. C. Jameson had testified he gave Cannon $65,300 for the anti-Smith campaign and that the board of temperance of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had given $5000 and that the only report made showed receipt of $17,090 from Jameson.

"Do you have any explanation to make?" asked Caraway.

"Mr. Pickett of the Methodist board stated the exact facts," replied Cannon. "The board gave me $5000 for circulation of my speech, 'Prohibition Repeal Unthinkable.' That was not political activity. It was prohibition work."

"Was the money given you by Jameson to be used by the Methodist board?" Caraway asked.

"No."

Cannon testified his activities had been as an individual and not as an official of the Methodist church.

Walsh read a report from Dr. Clarence True Wilson of the Methodist board telling of the contribution to Bishop Cannon for his "heroic work," and asked:

"What was this heroic work?"

Cannon said it began in 1927 when he called attention to the "menace" against prohibition. He referred to his subsequent address "Prohibition Repeal Unthinkable," and the tremendous circulation of it.

"Do you think the victory as great now as you did in 1928?" asked Caraway.

"Oh, my, yes," Cannon rejoined. "If we had not won we would have been in the slough of despond now."

"I thought we were," added Caraway with a smile.

Barber Acquitted for Carrying Razor

Washington, June 11 (UB)—"Judge, that razor is the same thing to me as a brief case is to a lawyer."

The logic of this plea won acquittal in police court for Thomas Stewart, colored, charged with carrying a concealed weapon.

Thomas was discharged when he proved to the satisfaction of the court that he was in fact a barber.

"Reds" Pay Fines of $20 in Superior Court

Fines of $20 each were imposed on Alan Ross and Mark Whittier, on trial before Judge Burns in Suffolk Superior Court, on charges of obstructing traffic.

The government showed that the defendants, said to be Communists, held a meeting on Stanford and Merrimac sts., last April, and that pedestrians were unable to pass until after police had broken up the meeting.

Hoover and Davis Talk Retirement

Washington, June 11 (UB)—President Hoover was a private dinner guest of Secretary of Labor Davis at the latter's home last night. It is understood that Davis' forthcoming retirement from the cabinet was discussed.

The impression prevails in official circles here that Secretary Davis will bring his nine and a half years' cabinet career to a close in August.

"Just Heat and Eat"

All you have to do is to heat the can, open it and serve. No hours of work in a hot kitchen—no time taken from healthy outdoor recreation. Best of all, your family will welcome this change from heavier foods, for Mueller's Spaghetti is delightfully light and fluffy and easy to digest.

It is made from a special blend of farina, that wonderfully nutritious food, known everywhere for its easy digestibility.

Please Your Own Taste

STUFFED GREEN PEPPERS

1 Can Mueller's Cooked Spaghetti 6 Green Peppers
6 Tablespoons Grated Cheese

Cut tops off the peppers, remove seeds and fibre. Stand in boiling water for 10 minutes. Drain. Then fill each pepper with the cooked spaghetti, cover the top with grated cheese.

Place the peppers upright in a pan containing a small amount of hot water. Bake in a moderate oven for 20 minutes.

Keep half a dozen cans of Mueller's Cooked Spaghetti in your pantry at all times. They will always be ready for a quick and healthful meal—and you may be sure that this meal will always be appreciated by your family and your guests. It is the better flavor of Mueller's Cooked Spaghetti—its light and fluffy texture—its healthful goodness—that make this food stand supreme.

Ask your grocer for Mueller's Cooked Spaghetti. He has it or can get it for you.

WOMAN REPLIES TO WICKERSHAM TONIGHT

Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton Will Discuss Prohibition Enforcement

What promises to be a very interesting discussion, as related to Mr. George W. Wickersham's criticism of the methods of enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment at Boston Garden Monday night, will occur late this afternoon at 5:45, when Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton, chairman of the Constitutional Defense committee, speaks over the radio at station WNAC.

Mrs. Tilton's views are decidedly dry and her reply to Mr. Wickersham will undoubtedly hold much of interest. Mrs. Tilton is reported as having said

"If Mr. Wickersham does not approve of our system, and favors the English system, I do not believe he is fit to head the commission engaged in observance of prohibition enforcement.

"I was not present at the meeting and did not hear what he said, but if it is true that he does not approve of our system, he should be removed."

The time period which Mrs. Tilton will be on the air is but 15 minutes; 5.45 to 6 o'clock.

CONCERNING RADIO

Edited by BILL WHIPPLE

For the past three Sunday nights we have listened to that inimitable humorist, Will Rogers, mess up the air from Hollywood. And it has seemed to us that Will "ain't so good." He doesn't seem to get his message across as he should. Although fame has perhaps made Rogers a little careless in the preparation of his talks, and he has ceased to delve down deep into that inexhaustable reservoir of rich humor which he possesses, trusting, perhaps unconsciously, to his reputation to get his stuff across, we are inclined to believe that the trouble goes deeper than that.

We hear a lot today about "radio personality," that indefinable something in the human ego which attracts listeners; some quality of the voice which touches a responsive chord in the being of the listeners, which quietly places them in a more receptive mood. We doubt much that Will has this microphone presence.

When Rogers is before you on the stage, smiling his twisted Infectious smile, chewing his gum and keeping up his continuous patter as he centers your attention upon the rope he swings, then it is a pretty cold individual who does not get a series of hearty chuckles from his thrusts. But Rogers of the air seems to be another individual entirely.

Radio personality is a fact. And such being the case it is, in a great many cases very fortunate for both listeners and the entertainers that the latter cannot be seen; how disillusioning it would be could the invisible audience meet face to face some possessor of "that wonderful voice," which has for perhaps many weeks been stirring the listeners imagination to heights of romance and of stirring deeds.

As in the motion picture field, so it is in the broadcasting industry, for it really has become an industry some of the most beautiful and accomplished actresses will never be seen and heard on the screen for they do not, for some unknown reason, film or register at all good. And like difficulties are met in the broadcasting, with every visible and audible requisite for success on the air, when the subject attempts to broadcast their personality is entirely obliterated and the voice is awful.

We still believe Will Rogers is America's leading humorist; but not on the air. No, not on the air

We are sincere in our regret that the radio audience of WBZ-WBZA will hear Howard A. (Pete) Petrie no more; unless by chance the rumor is correct that he is to become affiliated with the National Broadcasting Company, when his sonorous bass will come to us through the network. However, "Pete" has severed his connection with our local stations and departed for the great open spaces.

Not satisfied with taking all and sundry of his friends and acquaintances for a ride in his column, which for some strange reason he calls the "Wisdom Box," George C. MacKinnon is going to add his vocal powers to the quips of his pen. Tonight, at 7:45 o'clock, over WEEI, George will tell the radio listeners about many of the interesting and unusual amusements that Revere has to offer. It ought to be good.

At the Radio Dial

BENNY LEONARD, one of the greatest fighters of all time, and undefeated lightweight champ from 1917 until 1926 when he retired, will be interviewed tonight by Grantland Rice over the NBC wires on WEEI at 9 tonight on the Coco Cola program. "Benneh," who has been visiting the training camps of Sharkey and Schmeling, contenders for the heavyweight crown Thursday night, will give his verdict of the outcome of the battle

GAY SUMMERY MUSIC will be presented by the Mobiloil Concert Orchestra tonight at 8.30, coming from WEEI. Some of the lighter melodies by Tschaikowsky, Mendelssohn and Rimsky-Korsakov will be played by the 55-piece orchestra under the direction of Nat Shilkret. Lois Bennett, soprano, and Yascha Zayde, violinist, are the guest artists Miss Bennett will sing the "Glow Worm" and "The Moon and I." Mr. Zayde will play Friml's "Mignonette."

AN UNUSUALLY fine program by the Philco Symphony Orchestra will be played tonight over WNAC from 10 to 11 o'clock. Howard Barlow has selected numbers by Verdi, Mendelssohn, Massenet, Liszt, Tschaikovsky Grieg and Wagner. Selections from Wagner's "Tristran and Isolde" will be played

A GALAXY of stars will be presented tonight over the Columbia broadcasting system, coming to us over WNAC. Lupe Veles, screen star; Ethelind Terry, featured player; Paul Whiteman's Rhythm Boys, and many others will entertain on the California Melodies program beginning at 11:30 o'clock.

THE LAST MYSTERY message goes on the air tonight at 8 05 on WNAC. Its successor will be an even more interesting feature called Ripley's word hunt. This "latest indoor sport" is sponsored by Ripley of "Believe It Or Not" fame. Beginning tomorrow on WHDH at 11:10 in the morning and 6:55 in the evening this contest starts.

A FEW YEARS AGO "Humoresque" was in almost every radio repertoire. Recently, little of this Dvorak melody has been heard, hence last night it had a special appeal. "Around the World With Music" from WBZA at 8.30 played Czecho-Slovakian music. To hear the folk songs played by the orchestra would make the listener want to visit that country. They played the final movement from Dvorak's New World Symphony with technique that a larger orchestra would display.

THE HENRY-GEORGE PROGRAM had no life. This program, which now comes at 9 from WNAC, missed fire last night. It lacked the usual speed and humor, and even the orchestra, which ordinarily is "full of pep," dragged its weary way through the half-hour. Only spasmodically did Henry and George come up to their standard of previous weeks.

When will we stop hearing about the marvels of Chicago? The Westinghouse Salute continued the orgy last night from 10 to 10:30, and it was with difficulty that the music overcame the handicap. "Romp and Circumstances" was played without the usual noisiness bands give to this piece. Other band numbers were played with zest and spirit. Charles Marshall only partly atoned for his misfortune of the evening before. He sang "Vesti la Gubba" from "Pagliaci," and although his voice had a full resonance, he overdramatized the number.

ROSES MIXED WITH Carl McCullough and the R. K. Olians, but especially roses comprised the RKO hour at 10 30 from WEEI Able singers in Hazel Glenn and Jay Velie sang rose songs excusively in honor of the Portland, Oregon, Festival of Roses. Carl McCullough, Bobby Clark's "feeder" monologued a salesgirl. Not particularly funny

3 SOMERVILLE YOUTHS ESCAPE FLAMES

Joseph Armstrong, Jr., Joseph P Ivaska and Frederick Eimert, all of Somerville, were en route to a training camp at Norfolk and were playing cards forward in the Fairfax at the time of the crash. Ivaska, whose home is at 87 Prichard ave., Somerville, said

"The fog horn was blowing constantly as we proceeded slowly through the fog. There was a heavy jar which slid our cards from the table to the floor. Intense excitement followed

"Looking through the forward windows of the card room I saw red flame everywhere as fire broke out on the ship. We were stunned. We didn't know what to do. Somehow we rushed to the deck, where the flames from the oil nearly overcame us. We had to lie down to get any fresh air.

"Two sergeants of marines came along and ordered us to go aft and put on life preservers. We didn't go aft but we went inside. Looking out of the windows we saw the marines and some sailors in uniforms using hose lines with which they were washing the flaming oil from the deck.

"We saw one lifeboat drop into the sea when its davits were burned away, but do not know whether anyone was in the craft at the time. I think two other boats also fell to the water when flames swept the davits."

"The radio antenna and part of the uprights fell across the deck, pinning the head chief electrician of the navy, whose name I don't know, wound wet cloths about his hands and started to repair the antenna. He did repair it, but so far as I know, no SOS signal was sent out.

"We were ordered into the lifeboats on the starboard side, the side away from the fire, but these were only lowered part way and were not launched. We waited in the boats for hours, it seemed, before the cruiser arrived and took us off.

Maine Sailor Died in Rescue Attempt

Rolling waves, fog, fire, screams And out of it all a man who died true to the United States Navy tradition.

Such is the story of Seaman J. B Walker of Kittery, Me., who sank beneath a fire-coated sea, clinging to a woman he had hoped to save.

This tale of heroism was told by Seaman Fred Jam of the U. S. S. Concord, a passenger on the Fairfax

The crash, the explosion like that of a monstrous firecracker bursting before one's eyes, stunned those aboard the Fairfax, Jam said. A woman was hurled into the air and landed across a deck rail, hanging limp and unconscious

Slowly her body sagged toward burning oil that covered the sea. Heat and flames played about her. Just as her weight drew her downward, Walker ran to her. He threw his arms about her legs in a football tackle. Her weight was too much and slowly the two slid over

Ship Tragedy Halts U. S. Navy Officer's Family Reunion

Tragedy instead of a happy reunion on the West Coast stalked the family of Comdr. L. B. Anderson, U. S. N., Providence, whose daughter Beatrice, 21, was critically injured in the collision. The girl is in Carney Hospital suffering from burns. Her condition is critical.

Her mother and sister Carol, 6, came to Boston in response to telegrams. The mother had planned to leave Providence today for the Pacific coast to join her husband, recently transferred to the Pacific fleet

He is on the U. S. S. Nevada which passed through the Panama Canal yesterday. Beatrice was on the Fairfax, en route to Norfolk to board an army transport and follow her father's route through the canal to the West Coast.

Sing "Stein Song" Awaiting Rescue in Sea Crash

One can't escape "The Stein Song," even in a disaster at sea.

Passengers landing from the Fairfax today reported that during the four-hour interval while they were awaiting arrival of the rescue boat, students aboard the liner grouped around a piano, playing and singing to keep up the morale of the downhearted

"The Stein Song" was the favorite piece

News of the Port of Boston -:- By Carl Morrison

Here is another chapter in the harbor "war" between our truthful fishermen who swear to seeing a sea serpent, and some skeptical sea captains who claim there is no such animal, mammal or fish.

Says the commander of the U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey force in Boston

"A couple of years ago the Literary Digest printed an article by one of the high officials of our service. He pointed out that not once in the scores of years of service of our surveyors in known or uncharted seas all over the globe, had anyone ever sighted what really could be termed a sea serpent."

Be that as it may, a fishing captain and his crew of 21 men insist their broad daylight view off Georges Bank was no illusion.

Scot Pilgrimage

On July 23, the Transylvania of the Anchor Line will sail from Boston with several thousand Scotsmen and their friends, bound for a pilgrimage to Scotland. The visit is sponsored by the Order of Scottish Clans and Daughters of Scotia. Alexander Hart, of Clan Campbell of Chelsea, will have charge of the delegation from Boston and New England. The ship will be in command of Capt. David W. Bone of New Haven, Ct., well known to Boston travellers.

An interesting feature is that the Caledonia will sail from New York about the same time, with a DX Western delegation. After the two steamers get northward of Cape Race, they will sail side by side across the Atlantic. The party will start back on September 6.

Sea Going Chronicle

Sailing for Virginia from Boston are John B. Warren of Boston and Edward Battles of Brockton. Signing up yesterday for Texas was Frank Adams of Boston.

Our daily sea advice to landlubbers today consists of:

"Always be sure to ask the captain for your turn to paint the wireless yards. This is not the rigorous task it was in former days, as now you can do it with spraying hose in about an hour or so."

The American Republics line to South America reports that the West Calumb has established a new record from Santos, Brazil, to Boston. This steam cargo, oil burning 6000-ton ship made the run in 16 days and 11 hours which bettered the previous record by 3 day and 13 hours

Bostonians Afloat

On the White Star liner Homeric, due in New York today from Southampton and Cherbourg, are Mr. and Mrs. Frank Crawford, Miss Irene M. Crawford and Mrs. David M. Little, of Boston

Arriving in Boston yesterday on the North German Lloyd liner Kaiserin Auguste was Herman Voss of Hamburg. He will be the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Dreier, of Winchester, who plan a motor trip to Niagara Falls.

Today's Who's Who

Eugene F. Sullivan, manager of the marine department of the Mexican Petroleum Corp., is the subject of today's harbor personage sketch.

E. F. Sullivan

"Sully" is in charge of a big fleet of "Mex Pet" boats entering Boston, and is a recognized authority on crude oils. He is an enthusiastic member of the Foreign Commerce Club committee on ways and means, and thoroughly enjoys his duties on Bachrach photo the banquet committee

Thus young man is a good mixer He has a hobby of bowling and is a shark at picking off the single pins.

Our Mariners' Club

More letters are arriving in response to our invitation—extended in this newspaper and over station WHDH—to boys of 15 years or older to join a Boston American Mariners Club of those who are interested in the sea.

A typical letter is one from Edward J. Devitt of Chandler st., West Somerville, who writes in part

"I should like very much to belong to this club, for I have always been interested in ships and I know many sailors. Someday I would like to ship out if I knew exactly how to go about getting a job aboard a ship. I enjoy reading your Boston port news every evening, as it tells so much of what is going on in Boston harbor. I am 18 years old and have received a certificate from Wentworth Institute."

Miscellaneous

Today's safety rule reads.

Our "Old Timer" today reports:

"I well remember when Jack Leonard of John G. Hall Co. saw the presentation of Emperor Jones in New York, and came home to give free interpretation to his friends. If Jack had not been such a successful steamship man, he undoubtedly would have been called to the stage as his acting is a classic."

FUNERAL OF MRS. CURLEY WILL BE HELD ON FRIDAY MORNING

LAST RITES IN CATHEDRAL OF HOLY CROSS

Mayor Grieving Deeply, b. Bearing Up; Condolences From All Over U. S.

The funeral of Mrs. James M Curley, wife of Mayor Curley, who died last night at her home in Jamaica Plain after a long illness, will be held Friday morning.

A solemn high mass of requiem will be offered at the Cathedral of the Holy Cross at 10 o'clock. Rt. Rev. Mgr. Richard J. Haberlin, vicar-general of the archdiocese of Boston and pastor of St. Peter's Church, Dorchester, will be celebrant.

Assisting at the mass will be Rev. James F. Kelly, pastor of Our Lady of Lourdes Church, Jamaica Plain, the mayor's home parish, deacon Rev. Neil A. Cronin, administrator of the Cathedral, sub-deacon; Rev. John R. Wall of the Cathedral master of ceremonies.

Music of the mass will be sung by a special quartet. At Old Calvary Cemetery, where the burial will take place, Fr Kelly will say the prayers.

While messages of condolence and sympathy poured in from all sections of the country today, Mayor Curley took up the sad task of arranging for the funeral. Intimate friends came to his aid and will handle the details.

The mayor is bearing up well, but his grief has taken a marked effect on him.

Death came to Mrs. Curley at 8.35 o'clock. She was surrounded by her family and the Mayor was holding her hand.

The Mayor had hurried to his home from City Hall yesterday afternoon, when Mrs Curley began to lose strength. Dr. Martin J. English, who had attended Mrs. Curley since the start of her illness, Archbishop Michael Curley and Charles Whelan were called to the house.

GALLANT FIGHT

The recent hot spell, it was said, had sapped the strength of Mrs. Curley. Yesterday, however, at 4 o'clock, her condition suddenly turned for worse.

The entire city had watched the gallant fight Mrs. Curley had been making against her illness. Gatherings throughout the city had prayed for her and on Monday Cardinal O'Connell paid a visit to the Curley home to cheer her.

At her bedside when death came were her children, James M., Jr., a law student at Harvard, Paul, Leo, George, Francis and Miss Mary Curley, who graduated from the College of the Sacred Heart, Manhattanville, N. Y., last week.

The death of Mrs. Curley was a great blow to the family, who worshipped her.

Probably the last time she had been out-side her home was in last November when she visited the grave of the Rev. Father Peyton at the Holy Cross Cemetery Malden, at the time when hundreds of thousands were praying there daily. Prior to that she had visited the polls with other members of her family to cast her vote for her husband for mayor.

Mrs. Curley has maintained an active interest in the municipal. She was her husband's "right hand man" in his famous political battles. Even though afflicted she held his grim hand on her. Mrs Curley worked and prayed for the cause of Governor Alfred E. Smith in the last Presidential campaign.

In late months her condition seemed even her closest friends. Christmas time her condition was such that it was thought she would not be on hand to participate in the inauguration of the office of mayor. Then came the time when she lived to see her husband inaugurated, she had the comfort of knowing that he had been elected because she had been by his side all along.

She listened to the inauguration of her husband over the radio and then fought off death to see her daughter, Mary graduate from the College of the Sacred Heart a week ago.

BORN IN ROXBURY

Mary Theresa Herlihy Curley was born in Roxbury on Thanksgiving Day of 1884, the eldest daughter of Dennis and Mary Herlihy. Her parents were natives of Cork Ireland who came to this country some 50 or 60 years before. In Ireland her father had been a school teacher.

The family lived in a house in Burke st. and Mary Ellen attended the Hyde grammar school for girls, which was located in Hampden st.

Eleven children were born to Mr and Mrs. Herlihy and when the latter passed away soon after Mary's graduation from the Hyde school, the duties of household and "mothering" the Herlihy brood descended upon the slim shoulders of the oldest girl.

She accepted them gracefully and discharged them well, calling upon that charm of personality which in later years was to serve her so well in motherhood, the conduct of her own household and upbringing of a large family of her own.

She found time, too, to further her own education at home and to take part in the social activities of St. Francis de Sales church, where she was a communicant.

Both Mary Herlihy and James M. Curley were Sunday school teachers. Their romance had its inception at one of the social functions conducted under the auspices of St. Philip's Church, Harrison ave., in those days when the Rev Philip J. O'Donnell, pastor of St James Church on the lower end of the avenue, was a moving spirit for good among the young members of several parishes.

Curley was then a member of the House of Representatives from old Ward 17, Roxbury, and was living with his widowed mother and brother, John, at 847 Albany st.

He announced his candidacy for alderman in the district comprising Ward 12, then part of the South End, and Ward 17, with the famous old Ward 17 Tammany Club, of which he had been organizer, behind him.

MARRIED IN 1906

Naturally the girls in the Curley stronghold were pledged to work for the Tammany Club candidate and Miss Herlihy, as she was known to most of her chums, was one of his most ardent supporters. A sextet of girls interested themselves in an entertainment conducted in Curley's interest at the Opera House on Dudley st, and the future Mrs. Curley was the best ticket seller.

They were married on June 27, 1906, in St Francis de Sales Church by Rev. Corneius J Herlihy, a cousin of the bride. From that moment on, Mrs Curley was at her husband's side through thick and thin, political discussion, but rose to fame and at every public function of importance except his inaugurals for the third term as mayor of Boston.

As the bride of Alderman James M Curley she went to live with him in an apartment on the first floor of a three story apartment house on Mt Pleasant st, Roxbury. From the very first Mrs. Curley displayed a keen appreciation of her duties as adviser to her husband. She was just such a wife as James M. Curley, with a big, political future reaching ahead, needed to keep his feet on the ground at all times.

She consulted foes of her husband into friends; she seemed gifted with the ability to read tired eyes. Long in the middle of those who professed to be his friends ere were not.

The future mayor laid his campaign for re-election to the board of aldermen and Mrs. Curley took her place as political adviser at the conferences that shaped the campaign and issues.

IN WASHINGTON

Through life she was a devout Catholic with a beauty of soul that was reflected first in the man she married and later in the children that came to bless their lives. Curley fell seriously ill during his second term as alderman and she nursed him through a long siege supplying with her own hands the worldly ministrations necessary for his recovery and calling upon God and through her own faith.

For her husband's next step up the political ladder to a seat in Congress Mrs. Curley supplied the nice adv "boost," being the campaign manager behind the scenes when defeat of Congressman Joseph F. O'Connell and former Congressman William S. McNary. In Washington, as she was elsewhere, Mr. Curley was beloved of all with whom she came in contact.

Curley was re-elected to a second term and while serving it reached the decision to be a candidate for mayor of Boston. What part he played in this decision is not known.

About that time the Curleys moved across the street to a single house known as the Wentworth estate and there on more spacious grounds the five of the Curley children found more opportunity for outdoor life.

There, also, on the lower floor of the new Curley home, were held the conferences of political leaders that shaped James M. Curley's path to the mayoralty. Mrs. Curley met all the men who went to the house to discuss the campaign, sat and talked with them, offered her own suggestions as to various plans and passed upon the worth and sincerity of others. To his wife, far more than to any other individual or group of individuals, Curley owed the success of his race.

DEATH OF DOROTHEA

Soon after his election the Curleys moved from Roxbury to their present home in Jamaicaway.

During these years Mrs. Curley was shaping the destinies, not only of her husband, but of an increasing family. There were born to her all nine children, six of whom are living, James Michael, Jr., Mary E., Paul, Leo, Francis and George. Twins born to her in 1921 died soon after birth.

The most cruel blow she suffered was in 1925, when her 14-year-old daughter, Dorothea, died of pneumonia.

Mrs Curley was as close to her children as it is possible for a mother to be. She held the sanctity of the home above all else. To husband and children she offered faith, an undying love and an understanding of all human failings, and these, in turn, were given to her by them. The mayor called her "Mother"; she called her husband "Father." They were mother and father in every sense of the word and no home was happier than theirs.

IDEAL HOME LIFE

She had her own ideas of the manner in which her children should be reared and the success of the Curley home life remains a tribute to their worth. A few years ago she said:

"There is today a woeful lack of home life. By home life I mean the son a chum of his father, the daughter a strict confidant of her mother, and the family fireside a place where both son and daughter, together with parents, meet their friends for social recreation.

"Parents should study their children as keenly as they follow their business affairs. If a business proposition shows a reverse inclination, steps are immediately taken for its correction.

Under her tutelage Mrs Curley was active in many women's organizations among them the Women's Relief Corps, Women's Auxiliary, M. C. B. A., Philomathia Club, Brent Guild and Guild of the Infant Saviour.

Cadets Postpone Review by Curley

The review of the First Corps of Cadets by Mayor Curley, scheduled for tonight, was indefinitely postponed today by Col. Horace A. Lanton, corps commander. The communication from Col. Landon to the mayor also carried the sympathy of the entire command.

City Clerk Wilfred Doyle has ordered all municipal flags to be flown at half-staff until after the funeral services for Mrs. Curley on Friday and has notified all municipal heads that City Hall will be closed during the period of the final obsequies.

Mrs. Curley Now 'Blessed Memory'

Samuel Silverman, corporation counsel of the city, issued the following statement on learning of Mrs. Curley's death:

"A faithful and devoted mother and wife, a loyal helpmate and comforting companion—she was an inspiration to all who knew her.

John F. Fitzgerald issued the following statement:

"Mrs. James M. Curley was a remarkable woman, a constant and stimulating inspiration to her husband. She stands out as a shining example of what an American girl can accomplish.

"The few years in public life has it been given to enjoy the association and companionship that she gave to the mayor as a wife, mother and American citizen. She occupied a high niche in private life, American life, and all through her own endeavor. May the Almighty God rest her soul in peace."

Mourned by All

Flag Saves Lives as Train Crashes Truck

Lynbrook, L. I., June 11 (AP)—When a motor truck, hauling a derrick on a trailer, stalled today on a crossing on the Long Island railroad, Watchman Christopher Stockey dashed toward an oncoming train waving his red flag.

The motorman, John Udell, could not stop, but he jammed on his brakes, cut off the motors, and ran through the first car warning passengers. The train hit the truck and wrecked it, two cars being derailed and service interrupted for almost five hours. Nobody was injured.

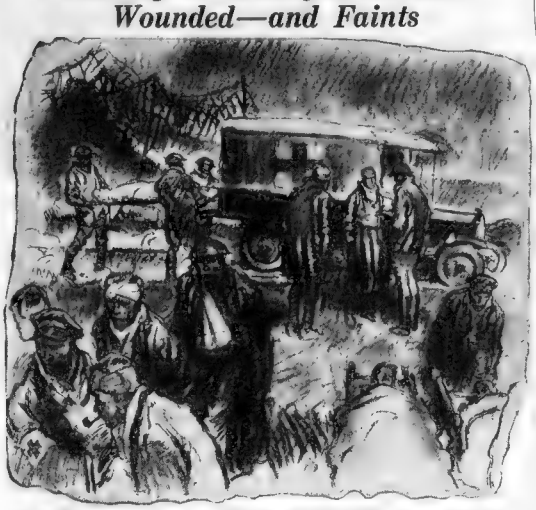
STEPDAUGHTERS of WAR

by HELEN ZENNA SMITH

Woman Ambulance Driver Makes First Journey at Midnight to Meet Wounded—and Faints



MY NERVES were all on edge, and the first ghastly glimpse of blood and shattered men sent me completely to pieces as I assumed my job to help win the war.

Chapter I

We have just wakened from our first decent sleep for weeks — eight glorious dreamless hours of utter exhaustion. The guns are still booming in the distance as energetically as when we fell on our cots beds without the formality of removing our uniforms, shoes, gaiters or underclothing.

We have not had our garments off for nine days, but there has been an unexpected lull this afternoon, no evacuations, only one funeral, and very few punishments, though we feel the usual midnight whistle will break our run of luck any time now. That gives us ten minutes to dress and stand by ambulances ready for convoy duty. In the meantime we snuggle neck-high in our flea-bags and munch slabs of chocolate and stale biscuits.

Slept Like Logs
All Except Tosh

We have slept like logs through the evening meal—all except Tosh, who never misses a food call on principle. It is her turn to make the Bovril. We gloatingly watch her light the little spirit lamp. We are hungry, but we are used to hunger. We are always hungry in varying degrees — hungry, starving, or ravenous. The canteen food is vile at its best; at its worst is defies description — except from Tosh. We have existed mostly on our own Bovril, biscuits, and slab chocolate since arriving in France, and when all is said and done it is a colourless, discouraging diet for young women of twenty-three—which our six ages average—who are doing men's work.

Tosh is the only one who can systematically eat the canteen tack without being ill or coming out in food boils; but she has a stomach as strong as a horse's. Also, she has been out longer than the rest of us and is more hardened. At first her inside used to revolt as ours still does, but she thinks that in another month or so she could eat what the food resembles without turning a hair.

The girl in the next bed, known as "The B. F.," objects to this remark on the grounds of coarseness, but Tosh only grins. The rest take no notice. A short while back we would have shrunk into ourselves with undisguised horror at the smile, but our minds in addition to our digestions are becoming acclimatised.

Sordid comparisons are in the picture here where life has so suddenly become sordid. We wish they would both dry up and let us doze between biscuits until the whistle actually blows. Besides, we know The B. F.'s protests are merely for refinement's sake. Tosh the sinner is not of the common herd. She is the niece of an earl. That, in The B. F.'s eyes, covers a multitude of Anglo-Saxon frankenesses.

Stable Language
Tosh's Vocabulary

I watch Tosh lazily. She is wandering around in the flickering candlelight dressed in a soiled woolen undervest and a voluminous pair of navy blue bloomers, chain-smoking yellow perils at a furious rate. There is something vaguely comforting in the Amazonian height and breadth of Tosh. She has the hips of a matron—intensified by the four pairs of thick combinations she always wears for warmth—a mind like a sewer—(her own definition)—the courage of a giant—the vocabulary of a Smithfield butcher, and the round, wind-reddened face of a dairymaid. She says she picked up her repertoire of language from the stable lads—her father is a well-known sportsman—and there is no reason to doubt her word. Nevertheless, Tosh is the idol of the entire convoy, not only of this room. I have adored her since the first night I arrived, that ghastly first night I was shoved on to an ambulance at midnight and told to meet my first convoy of wounded. I had never driven by night before, even in England. My nerves were all on edge, and the first ghastly glimpse of blood and shattered men sent me completely to pieces. We backed our ambulances in a long row. Tosh was next in line to me. She watched me climb down, saw me, half-fainting, retching my heart out against the bonnet of my own bus, slipped from her driving seat, seized me and shook sense into me.

"Pull yourself together, you bloody West Kensington lady with your bloody West Kensington tricks. You're loaded. Get back before Commandant spots you. You're holding up the line. Get back."

Cuts Hair Off
Is More Sanitary

I got back. I drove till dawn to and fro—station, Number Five Hospital—Number Five Hospital, station—sick, numb, frozen-fingered, frozen-hearted — Station, Number Five Hospital—Number Five Hospital, station—

It ended, just as I thought it would never end. Back again at the depot I collapsed with my head on the steering-wheel. Tosh helped me down, forced steaming cocoa into me—

"Pretty bloody kick-off, Smith. But wait till you

GIVES LIFE TO SAVE HER BABY

Sees Lives Snuffed Out

Burned Fatally on Ship Saving Baby

HER LIFE A FORFEIT for her child's. Mrs. Ida Berkowitz, 22, 58 Holworthy st., Roxbury, died at Carney Hospital. She was terribly burned when she fought off restraining hands and dashed through the fire on the liner Fairfax to rescue her 14-month-old baby, asleep in a cabin below. She wrapped the child in a blanket and carried it out uncathed.

WOMEN LEAP FROM SHIP INTO SEA

Carstairs, Advertising Man, Tells a Graphic Story of Fairfax Fire Horror

Members of the Fairfax crew became panic-stricken during the fire following the crash, according to Herbert Carstairs, advertising man of the Washington Times-Herald, Washington, who was a passenger on the Merchants and Miners liner.

Carstairs is believed to have been the last to see H. M. Rose of Cambridge alive. Rose is listed among the missing

"At the time of the crash I was speaking with Rose, a Harvard law school first year man, who hadn't been found late last night," said Carstairs.

"There was a rather hard impact. Our ship was proceeding at half-speed with the fog horn blowing at intervals. We hadn't heard the tanker's horn.

MUCH HEROISM ABOARD

"An explosion occurred almost simultaneously with the crash. A large sheet of flame flared up. A heavy cloak of burning oil was thrown over our decks amidships and onto the bridge.

"The tanker went down in two or three minutes, stern foremost. Acrid fumes from the burning oil were nauseating. The sea was aflame around the Fairfax' bow.

"Some of the crew of the Fairfax became panic-stricken. Others were cool. There were several marines on board who were very cool. The stewards and stewardesses and nurses were cool and heroic in the face of the danger. The marines played a big part in putting out the fire.

SEES WOMAN DROWN

"Several women started praying on the deck. Others lost their heads. For a time a part of the Fairfax was an inferno. Three lifeboats were lowered halfway to the sea. Some of the other boats caught fire.

"There were several students from Massachusetts Institute of Technology on board and they worked with the crew and marines in extinguishing the flames.

"I saw a woman, her clothing aflame, leap overboard and I saw a sailor jump after her into the blazing sea. He reached her, but she pulled him under.

"Several who jumped undoubtedly would have been saved.

"I saw three or four men behind a flaming oil barrier and when the flames were extinguished they were nowhere to be seen."

Today, in the real estate columns of the Classified Section, will be found scores of opportunities for profitable investment.

Girls Tell Graphic Story of Horror in Ship Fire

The claim that some panic-stricken members of the crew of the Fairfax rushed about the decks knocking men, women and children aside is made by Misses Iona C Browne, 17, and Sarah Poynton 19, both of Washington

In relating their experience, the girls said:

"We were in our stateroom when we felt a sudden bump. The Fairfax seemed to quiver and suddenly stop. We fell off of our chairs.

"Realizing something was wrong, we rushed out and round the deck. We had hardly got outside when two or three negroes came rushing along the deck and knocked us down.

CHOKED BY SMOKE

"We got up and went to a lower deck and once more other sailors ran into us and knocked us down. We were thrown against some sort of a bulkhead and rolled over to the railing before some young man came along and got us to our feet.

"As we were being led along the deck by the man we could see a bright red light on the water and then the smoke from the burning oil began to choke us.

"The young man who picked us up put life preservers around us and placed us in a lifeboat which was lowered almost to the water's edge.

"By this time the Fairfax was surrounded by a wall of flaming oil and it seemed as though we were all doomed. No one seemed to know just what to do and when it appeared as if our lifeboat, still hanging beside the ship, would become ignited it was suddenly lifted to the deck of the Fairfax again.

COAST GUARD'S HEROISM.

"By this time the fire had either died away or been extinguished and we were placed in staterooms to await the arrival of the Gloucester.

"Never have we seen such a sight. There was general confusion and it seemed as though no one knew what to do.

"The one person who appeared to remain calm and collected throughout was a man in the uniform of a Coast Guardsman who was a passenger.

"As we were lifted to our feet after being knocked down we saw this young fellow pass uttering as he did something like 'Somebody better get organized and stop them from jumping overboard.

"He was shouting, 'Don't jump into the water, roll on the deck!'

"The next time we saw him he was hanging by his toes to the rail of the Fairfax holding a woman by the hands trying to get her ashore. That is the last we saw of him."

SACRIFICE MAY HAVE BEEN IN VAIN

Mother Plunges Through the Flames to Get Child in Fairfax Collision

Mrs. Ida Berkowitz, 22, of 58 Holworthy st., Roxbury, gave up her life today, a victim of a heroic attempt to rescue her baby when the ill-fated Fairfax broke into flame following the crash with the tanker.

She died at the Carney Hospital, where she was taken with other injured, and her sacrifice may have been in vain for the name of her son Robert, 14 months old, is on the danger list at the same institution.

Mrs. Berkowitz came to her death from burns suffered when she aped through flames and smoke on the liner to rescue the infant left alone in the cabin.

Bound for Norfolk, Va., to spend a month with relatives, Mrs. Berkowitz was believed to have been in her cabin with baby Robert when the Fairfax drove into the side of the tanker.

It is thought the woman went on deck to ascertain the cause of the crash, and on discovering the pandemonium that existed, turned back to save the child.

Members of the crew tried to stop her from entering the danger zone in which her cabin lay, but the frenzied woman fought them off and plunged into the flames and smoke.

Wrapping a blanket about the baby, she again retraced her steps, and by superhuman efforts made her way to the deck, only to collapse with her son in her arms.

LAUDS HEROISM OF CREW

Survivors landed from the Fairfax were divided as to the conduct of the crew. Not all witnessed panic or cowardice among them and several praised the ship's officers and crew highly.

One of those who had only commendation for the liner's crew was Mrs. P. F. Chilcott of Winthrop, who was en route to Norfolk to spend a year in the south

"Officers and men, both, were examples of efficiency and deserve the highest commendation," she declared.

She occupied an outside stateroom removed from the locality of the fire and was not awakened.

"I was in my stateroom alone when the collision occurred," she said.

"I felt only a slight jar. As to what followed, everything was handled in a most workmanlike manner. Both officers and men were examples of efficiency.

"Accidents like that are bound to happen. I'm not disturbed in the least by what took place. If a ship of the same line were going to the same destination today I would immediately book passage on it.

"Of course, there was a certain amount of discomfort from the fumes and dense smoke."

Others said the crew was well behaved, fighting the flames and doing their best to maintain order and prevent passengers from leaping overboard

BOSTON SENTIMENT CRYSTALLIZED IN OPPOSITION TO THE TARIFF

LEADERS SEE BIG LOSS IN REVENUE

Benefit From Rates on Shoes Will Be Neutralized by Duty Placed on Hides

The sentiment of New England business men and industrialists appeared to have crystalized today in opposition to the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill which will be reached in the Senate this week.

Boston business leaders, with few exceptions, maintain that the port will face a tremendous loss of revenue if the bill becomes law. Possible extinction of a world market for American exporters, increased unemployment and a high cost of living here would result, they claim.

While great pressure has been brought to bear on Senate members to discard what is termed the "higgledy-piggledy tariff bill," there are certain unmistakable signs that it will be passed.

In that event, it is possible that President Hoover will exercise his power of veto on the grounds that the bill violates promises he made to the people, and the swelling voice of protest, now being heard in Washington, may swing his decision.

STRADDLING MEASURE

The bill is held to be a "straddling" measure, favorable to some branches and wholly opposed to the interests of other branches of the same industries. This is well illustrated by the situation in the New England shoe and leather industry, as pointed out today by Charles H. Jones, president of the Commonwealth Shoe Co. of Boston, former president of the New England Shoe and Leather Association, and one of the most active of the industrialists opposing the bill as it is now drawn.

In the long run, he claims, the injury inflicted by the tariff on hides would more than compensate for the protection received on shoes.

"Its effect on the shoe and leather trade will not be very great at first," he said. "The protection accorded leather and shoes will keep out a large part of the foreign made shoes which have been coming to this market during the past few years, and goods to take their place will be produced in our own factories which is, of course, highly desirable, as the domestic goods are of fully as good quality and no more expensive.

INCREASE COST OF LEATHER

"The unfortunate feature in the bill is the duty of 10 per cent levied on cattle hides and calf skins. This tax will increase the cost of leather and, in the long run, will make shoe somewhat more expensive, but the most serious result is the injury it inflicts on the independent tanner. Several of the large packers are also extensively interested in tanning industries and they take off and control a large part of all the skins used in this country.

"The tax on hides and skins gives them a decided advantage in obtaining their raw material as compared with the independent tanner. The profits in the tanning industry have been none too large for the past eight years, and with this added handicap the future of the independent tanner is not very bright.

PUBLIC WILL SUFFER

"In the long run the injury inflicted by the tariff on hides will more than compensate for the protection received on shoes. The consuming public, and the shoe and leather industries, will also suffer in consequence of this unnecessary and unjustifiable tax on their raw material."

Scoring the Senate for its failure to pass a satisfactory bill, Lieut.-Gov. William S. Youngman charged that procrastination by this body is largely responsible for business depression and lack of employment.

He pointed out that the House of Representatives had sent a tariff bill to the Senate more than a year ago.

Fiance of Missing Girl Collapses as Fairfax Arrives

The stricken lover Fairfax had just docked in Boston today when Vincent B. Meade, 28, office manager of the New England Life Insurance Co., 87 Milk st., rushed into the Merchants & Miners office.

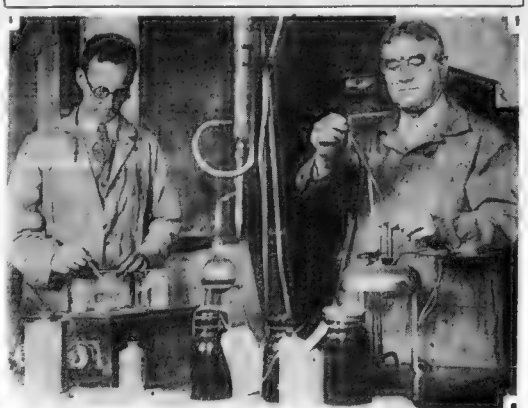
He was halted by guards just as a Boston Evening American reporter arrived. Meade, it was learned, is the fiance of Miss M. V. Craven, 24, of 17 Weld Hill st., Jamaica Plain.

Told she was listed as missing, Craven collapsed. Later he said he and Miss Craven had planned to wed this year.

She and a friend, Miss Georgette Creiton of 54 Forsyth st., Back Bay, also reported missing, were bound for Baltimore on a vacation.

What Do You Know About That?

SEWER SLEUTH WHO GUARDS THE CITY FROM FIRE HAZARD



H. T. Waterhouse B. M. Flaherty

SEWER SLEUTH AT WORK IN LABORATORY

YES, HUB HAS A SEWER SLEUTH

THE SEWER SLEUTH will get you if you don't watch out.

Sewer sleuth?

Uh, huh!

For what?

Contaminating sewers.

Yup, there is a sewer sleuth, and it is possible to contaminate a sewer. Pour a little gasoline or other inflammable material down your kitchen sink and you'll learn quickly enough—to your sorrow—how it is possible to contaminate a sewer, and who is the sewer sleuth.

If you don't care to pay a fine in order to find out, learn herewith that H. T. Waterhouse is the sewer sleuth, and that you contaminate a sewer unlawfully when you impregnate it with inflammables.

SLEUTHING EASY

Of course, H. T. Waterhouse is the city chemist, presiding in a little room on the top floor of City Hall. But the term sewer sleuth is not inappropriate, inasmuch as included among his innumerable other duties is the task of keeping Boston's sewerage system free of fire hazard by following clues from sewer to sewer, from pipe to pipe, from house to house.

And if you think it will not be noticed if you distribute waste inflammables into the sewer pipes, you have not taken the city chemist into account. Cleaning establishments, garages and other shops where inflammable liquids are used in quantities, will soon be found out if they discard their waste materials in the city's sewer system.

OTHER JOBS, TOO

Once a case of this kind is brought to the attention of the city chemist it is a simple matter to trace the origin of the inflammable, it is explained.

By the operation of a specially designed machine, fashioned by Waterhouse, a sample of the sewer contents at any given point may be taken. If this is found to contain inflammables it is then a matter of elimination only to trace the origin of the foreign materials to the very door of the infractor of the city rules.

Flooded cellars have caused many suits for damages to be brought against the city. Here again the chemist comes into play. He has but to take a sample of the offending waters and, by various tests, prove conclusively whether the water backed up from defective sewers or from some other source. The city is liable only for damages done to property by a defective sewer system.

Map shows where the Fairfax and the Pinthis collided off Scituate last night with heavy loss of life. The former was bound for Baltimore, the latter, for Boston.

Official Fears All on Tanker Lost

D. R. MacNeil, vice-president and general superintendent of the Merchants and Miners line, told the Boston Evening American this morning:

"The Fairfax was proceeding in Massachusetts Bay in the channel off Scituate at 7:05 p. m. standard time last night when it collided with an oil tanker. The tanker went down so soon that its name was not learned. It exploded immediately.

"As far as is known, all on board the tanker were lost.

"The Fairfax was enveloped in flames and as a result a number of passengers were badly burned and one of these died aboard the Gloucester on the way up the bay.

"I am afraid that some of the crew of the Fairfax are lost, but not certain because there has been no checkup of the crew.

"The steamer Gloucester, following the Fairfax, left here at 7 o'clock standard time. It arrived alongside the Fairfax at 11 p. m. Eastern standard time. As soon as possible, all passengers were transferred from deck to deck, and not in small boats, as we had in meagre reports sent up earlier.

"The reason the Gloucester came alongside was because the Fairfax wirelessed her.."

Asked if an SOS was sent out, he said that he had given the order to wireless the Gloucester and assumed that an SOS had been sent.

Coast Guard officers said they heard no SOS

The captain of the Gloucester, asked about the SOS, wasn't certain "until we talk with Fairfax radio man." This after a conference with MacNeil.

"The Fairfax is standing by off Scituate. There is a ten-foot hole in the bow, but she is in no danger.

"We have no list of those who returned on the Gloucester. "Two roll calls were made, but there was so much confusion it was impossible to get a checkup. We couldn't huddle them in one section to identify themselves

MacNeil admitted that there was 'a rumor" that "several" were missing.

Tanker's Captain Lost on Wife's Birthday

Capt Albert G Jones, of the tanker Pinthis, was 34 years old. A graduate of the Massachusetts nautical training ship he had been following the seas on oil tankers for 12 years.

By a peculiar twist of fate it was on the 34th birthday of his wife Marion Grammer Jones that he met his death.

When Mrs. Jones was interviewed by a Boston Evening American reporter about her husband's career she was unaware of the pitiful tragedy which had entered the life of herself and the couple's nine-year-old daughter Barbara.

Mrs. Jones said her husband left his home yesterday noon to make his regular trip on the Pinthis to Portland, Me., with a cargo of oil and gasoline from the New England Co.

Mrs. Jones said that she was planning an outing today for herself and daughter Barbara in observance of her birthday. She said that her husband had given her money for the day's celebration before leaving to take command of the Pinthis, yesterday.

Mrs. Jones said she believed there were 23 men in the crew of the tanker of which her husband had command

She and Capt Jones, both natives of Fall River, had been married 12 years

As Mrs. Jones talked with the reporter still unaware of what had happened she unconsciously remarked

"This is the first serious accident my husband has been in." Her next remark was: "Where is he now"

Officer Away, Girl Driver Dismissed

Yesterday was a lucky day for Miss C. Elizabeth Bradstreet, 21, of Tower ct., Wellesley College, for Judge William F. Bacon in the Newton District Court ordered a speeding complaint dismissed because Motorcycle Officer Alfred W. Hammell, the complainant, was away on his vacation

The student explained that by the time the officer returned, she would be in New York for her summer vacation.

Leaving two notes, and with all the pictures of his wife surrounding him, Frank W. Van Cott, 24, of 129 Russell st., Malden, committed suicide at the home of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Leontine Everett, of Second st., Medford, early today.

Van Cott's body was found by Patrolman John Amoroso, who was attracted to the kitchen of the house by a strong odor of gas. He found Van Cott lying on the floor, with the pet cocks of the gas stove and water heater wide open.

Sergt. Stuart Lanoz, a squad of officers and Deputy Chief Burton W. Harvey of the fire department, were notified. Investigation revealed that Van Cott had forced an entrance into the house through a pantry window.

Mrs. Everett's husband, Joseph R. Everett, for years a fireman with the Boston department, and attached to Engine 14, was buried yesterday from his home on Second st. Everett died from difficulty in notifying the two women of the death of Van Cott Medical Examiner Thomas M Durell was notified, and after an examination, ordered the body removed to the E. J. Gaffey undertaking rooms.

Saw 11 Leap to Death in Sea of Flames

Graphic descriptions of the fiery death which overtook passengers of the Fairfax at the start of a summer sea voyage were furnished today by survivors of the tragedy.

Four marines, bound for Norfolk on the first leg of a journey to Nicaragua, where they are to act as guards for the American Election Commission, described the scenes enacted when some of the passengers and members of crew, driven frantic by the sea of flame which surrounded them, leaped into the ocean.

The death of a husband and wife and their infant child was described by Sergt. Harry Hutchcroft, of Jacksonville, Fla., who was making the trip to Norfolk with Sergt. Harry Kept, Corp. Gerald Farnsworth, and Pvt. Harry McLellan.

"We turned in early," Sergt. Hutchcroft declared, and got our first knowledge of the crash when we were awakened by a violent thump. I put on my trousers, and shoes and rushed to the deck.

"At first I saw only the crew running about and I was told the boat had been struck.

"The next minute I saw flames shoot up from the sea and in a moment our boat seemed to be aflame. Passengers rushed out on deck and gathered at the side of the boat near the burning tanker.

"I joined the crew in trying to calm the passengers and we ordered all to the stern, where the heat was not so intense. As the oil spread the flames grew higher and higher and soon the radio antenna was burned away. A navy chief radio operator was aboard and he and members of the Fairfax radio gang put up a temporary antenna.

"The passengers grew worse, and some jumped overboard into the flames. I did my best to prevent them, but they were beyond reason. Anything seemed better than remaining on the boat.

"A husband and wife, the man holding an infant, dashed to the rail. I ran forward and told them to remain where they were.

"When I turned again to watch them I saw them jump together into the sea of fire.

"I saw 11 go to their death that way.

Sergt. Kept Says Some of Passengers Leaped Off

Sergt. Kept's story follows:

"As we peered forward, a big ball of flame appeared at the bow of the ship. It seemed to grow bigger and bigger and came slowly towards us. The whole front of the ship ablaze and the flames swept back towards us.

"Passengers who had rushed to the deck were driven towards the stern rear of the ship. Some passengers, we heard, jumped overboard at this time to escape what appeared to be certain death in the flames.

"As the fire swept aft, it commenced to subside. Passengers, at first dazed with terror, regained their composure quickly. Two nurses on the Fairfax did wonderful work in allaying the fears of the passengers. The officers and petty officers went among the passengers, quieting them and assuring them of no immediate danger.

"The first burst of flame had hardly spent itself when marines, naval men and the officers had a hose line at work battling the flames aboard ship. That the results were not far more serious than it has turned out seems marvelous."

Arthur F. Pierce, honor student of the class, delivered the valedictorian address. The class history was read by Hilda M. Wheeler of Canton, N. Y., secretary of the class.

HUNDREDS AID RECHECK OF HUB CENSUS

Block of 25 Families, Census Takers Failed to Count, Found

With hundreds of Boston Evening American coupons in the hands of local census supervisors for investigation, and each incoming mail to the Census Editor bringing hundreds more, the chances of Boston reaching the 800,000 population mark seem brighter today.

Louis B. Sensale and Leonard A. Frink, in charge of the 12th and 13th Suffolk Districts have detailed clerks to forward census blanks to those who have filled in the American coupons.

Instructions are mailed with each blank and, in the event they are not returned at once to the federal bureau, inspectors will be assigned to enumerate.

Both supervisors are making every effort to obtain a full count for Boston and have agreed to cooperate to the fullest extent with the Boston Chamber of Commerce and the Boston Evening American in rechecking all localities in which complaints of oversights have been made.

In today's mail an occupant of a Columbus ave. apartment house informed the Census Editor that the entire block, housing 25 families, had not been enumerated

This case was brought to the attention of the supervisor and will be checked at once, together with many others reported by individuals

Seeks Nomination

St. Johnsbury, Vt., June 11—Arthur W. Simpson filed nomination papers with the Secretary of State at Montpelier as a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor.

Help Boston Get a Full Count in the Census

If you live in Boston and were missed by the census men, please fill in this coupon and mail to the Census Editor, Boston Evening American:

Charges have been made that thousands of Bostonians have not been counted and that the city's total will be unfair, as a result. If you have not been counted, this coupon will bring an enumerator to your door. Or call Liberty 4000 and ask for the Census Editor.

CALLS OLD AGE ASSISTANCE GREAT ADVANCE IN WELFARE WORK

BAY STATE IS PRAISED BY CONANT

Social Workers Told About Statewide Program to Fight Cancer

"The Massachusetts plan for old age assistance is the opportunity for a great adventure in the care of aged persons," said Richard K. Conant, State commissioner of the Massachusetts department of public welfare, speaking before a country-wide group of public officials attending the National Conference of Social Work in the Public Library today.

"The old-age assistance law," said Mr. Conant, "is as noteworthy an advance in our relief laws as was the Mothers' Aid law in 1913. It is one of the progressive achievements of Governor Allen's welfare administration.

Speaking on the subject of cancer before the health division of the conference, Dr. George H. Bigelow, Massachusetts Commissioner of Health, stated that the death rate from this cause had apparently increased more than 50 per cent in the state during the last 20 years, the greatest increase in any state in the union.

STATE-WIDE PROGRAM

"Whatever we do for cancer," said Dr. Bigelow, "may well influence what we do for a far larger problem of the other degenerative diseases. Definite hospitalization measures will be taken so that next year at the Pondville hospital, for example, we expect to serve nearly 1000 patients.

"The state-wide cancer program has been launched. We have found an irresistable demand for service in this field, and we are striving desperately to anticipate and guide this demand."

"During the past two generations in Massachusetts the span of health and the span of life has decreased for individuals over 50," declared Dr. Herbert L. Lombard of Boston.

EXPECTATION DECREASES

He pointed out that the expectation of life in the group over 50 years is less than it was 50 years ago. He also said the diseases from which individuals are dying have changed and that now there is a longer duration of sickness prior to death.

Discussing the problems of unemployment before a large group, Ernest G. Draper of New York declared, "Out of more than 20,000 manufacturing concerns, less than one-half of 1 per cent have shown any active interest in the problem of industrial idleness.

"Society at large is almost as much to blame for present conditions as industry," he said. "Only in the last 20 years has the germ of unemployment been isolated and recognized as an industrial rather than a charitable problem.

CHANGE OF ATTITUDE

"Individual employers, regardless of the size of their concerns, cannot prevent such catastrophes, but by skillful forecasting and shrewd management they can mitigate the effect of the avalanche."

Dr. Draper pointed out that the experience of these employers shows a change in attitude, particularly since the depression of the past months has not been accompanied by a drive to reduce wages. He assigned as the main reason for this the fact that the workman is recognized as a consumer as well as a producer.

The spirit of activity desiring to create a state in which poverty would be banished and there would be opportunity for work for all, Mr. Draper typified as the greatest need of employers in solving the problem of unemployment.

The meetings which have drawn more than 5000 visitors to Boston to attend the National Conference of Social Workers will continue throughout the week in the hotels and public buildings all over the city. All meetings are open to the public

Ship's Nurse Heroine of Diaster to Those on Fairfax

Heroine of the Fairfax disaster was Miss Dorothy D. Mannix of Fitchburg, the ship's nurse.

Miss Mannix assumed charge of treating the injured and burned and it was largely due to her ministrations that the death list was not increased.

All who suffered burns were treated by her with olive oil and during the hours between the fire and the transfer of Fairfax passengers to the Gloucester she had not a moment to herself.

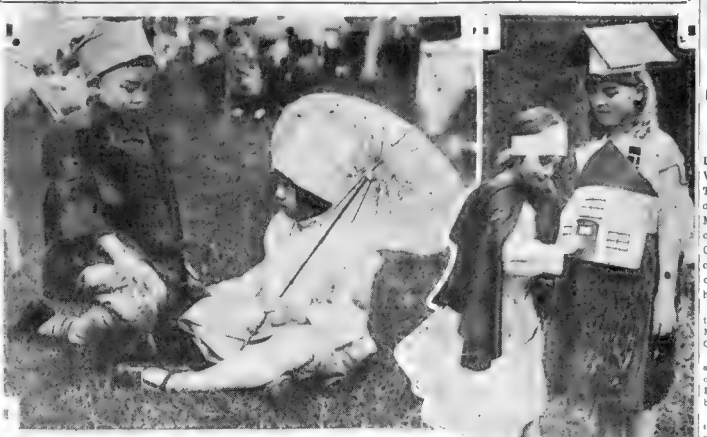
Children Put on 'The Tree of Knowledge' Pageant



BOSTON SCHOOL CHILDREN went out to Fenway Park with their history all locked up in pageantry. They let it out little by little as the program progressed and what a pleasant afternoon mother, father and friends spent. Helen Eng and William Wong of the Tyler st. school appeared in their native costume. We mean in native costume of their Chinese forefathers, as they are Americans.

10,000 IN GAY PAGEANT

Fully 10,000 school children arrayed in colored costumes took part in the tercentenary pageant at Fenway Park yesterday afternoon before a capacity crowd.

The pageant under the direction of Miss Anne Alfreda Mellish, of the Lowell school, depicted the various stages of school development in the Bay State, starting with the early colonial days.

Each school in the Boston school area was represented by pupils.

The program opened with the entire gathering of school children singing a hymn followed by long processions which were divided into various periods representing the Colonial, Transition and The New Era.

Costumes worn by the school children were most appropriate, both in design and color showing clearly the models and designs worn by the early settlers in the colonies.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS WILL RETIRE AFTER HE MAKES TWO MORE FILMS

TIRED OF DIRECTING DUTIES

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

Copyright, 1930, by Universal Service

LOS ANGELES, JUNE 11

—Douglas Fairbanks remarked to this writer several months ago that he would make no more pictures unless he could get just the right story. Those who are close to Doug say that he has wearied of producing pictures himself and wants no more of the responsibility.

United Artists holds a contract with him for two pictures and it is rumored that Doug will simply play a part in two stories of which he approves, letting someone else do the worrying about the direction, the production and the details. After he makes the two he will retire from the screen and forget stories.

Louella Parsons

is "Reaching for the Moon," as he announced in this column, with Bebe Daniels as the feminine star, and the other is "The Dove." This was originally a male starring vehicle with Holbrook Blinn, but U. A. instead of making the "best damn caballero in all Mexico" a villain, will make him a hero, winning the girl in the end. On this occasion Dolores Del Rio will be the leading feminine light.

I suppose George Fitzmaurice will be the logical choice for director. Perhaps I'd better mention that this little plan has only been discussed and is by no means as yet, definite.

AND SHURE, Tom Moore has a partiality for policemen. Maybe I should say the film companies prefer to see Tom as an Irish policeman. When "Rainbow" was about to go into production Samuel Zierler of the James Cruze productions got in touch with Tom for the role of Mahoney and you are safe in betting all your money Tom will do his best to glorify the cop. Lois Lane will have the leading feminine role and Russell Hardy, who played the juvenile lead in "The Criminal Code," will also have a part. I mean "The Criminal Code" on the stage. Walter Lang directs and Roscoe Karns and Wheeler Oakman are also in the cast.

ONE OF THE very nicest wedding presents received by Ben Lyon is a fat contract, handed him for five years by Warner Brothers. Ben finishes "Queen of Main Street" with Lila Lee today at First National. He and Bebe are being married Saturday with each of them having about a week between pictures on a honeymoon. When Ben returns from his honeymoon he will play the lead in "Hot Heiress," his first picture for Warners under the new contract, and Bebe goes to United Artists.

A DRIVE FOR better shorts is under way at the Paramount Studios. Instead of assembling a company at cost for the one and two reelers, such players as Arnold Ginger Rogers, Frank Tinney, Lillian Roth, Marion Harris, Smith and Dale, Lulu McConnell and Tom Howard will lend their best efforts to singing, dancing and comedy. One hundred and four one-reelers and 26 two-reelers is program planned. Today is the time to make shorts and, in the opinion of this columnist, a good short is to be preferred to a tiresome, long drawn out prologue any day in the week.

WILLIAM ANTHONY McGUIRE, eminent New York playwrite, came out here as a writer de remains a producer. When United Artists discovered the only way to keep Mr. McGuire was to let him produce pictures he was given a contract immediately. Florenz Ziegfeld expected that Mr. McGuire would return and write a new musical comedy for him but the chance to produce his own stories proved too much for Mr. McGuire. Irvin Berlin is giving him a great deal of credit for the story of "Reaching for the Moon" and it was probably the story which brought him the offer to produce.

PUBLIX PLANS 'OPEN HOUSE'

That the public may have an opportunity of viewing the machinery and processes by which modern theaters are kept at an even, equable and cool temperature even on the hottest days, and also that the same public may see for itself how "sound" is reproduced on the talking screen, the Publix theaters of Boston are to put forth an "open house" from 1 to 2:30 o'clock next Sunday afternoon.

At that time, in the Metropolitan, Washington St. Olympia, Uptown and Scollay Sq. theaters, all of which are equipped with modern refrigeration plants, the doors will be thrown open to the public. Uniformed attendants will be on hand to conduct visitors through the theaters and to explain every detail of operation, including both refrigeration and sound mechanics.

Admission during the "open house" period will be entirely free and the general public is cordially invited to visit one of these Publix theaters and walk "back stage."

The allurement of going behind the scenes of seeing and hearing just how one's favorite actor brings his voice to the screen, and of seeing also how a comfortable, cool temperature is always maintained even when the sun beats relentlessly down upon the streets outside, is expected to attract hundreds of persons to this unique and interesting reception.

Minnesota Students Give One-Act Play

Featuring a cast of University of Minnesota Players, a one act play, "Orange Juice," was given its first showing in the Young Men's Christian Union, 48 Boylston st., yesterday. The play is a distinct departure from the usual presentation of social work in that it offers 30 minutes of intense, fast moving entertainment. The play was written by R. D. Stevenson, publicity director of the Minneapolis Council of Social Agencies, and the cast is made up of University of Minnesota Masquers.

FAMILY LIFE DEPICTED IN FILM

American family life and the "short and simple annals of the poor" are woven into an amazing human document in "The Rise at Man in the World," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's vivid drama of "Main Street" featuring Louis Mann and an elaborate cast, which is to be given an early showing in this city.

Sam Wood directed an elaborate cast. Mann plays the head of the family as an old German barber; his children grow up to be doctors, teachers, inventors and finally leave him to have their own children and their own lives. It is a story every father knows.

Among the dramatic high spots are the sacrifice of the father's chance to be a millionaire, in order to save the health of his child; his giving up of everything he owns to educate a son in medicine and save another from prison, and the tragic Christmas Eve that finally brings him real happiness.

Read Friday's American for Best Accounts of Fight

Tomorrow night's world heavyweight championship fight between Jack Sharkey of Boston and Max Schmeling of Germany in the Yankee Stadium will be witnessed for Boston Evening American readers by the greatest staff of experts ever assembled to cover an athletic event.

Nothing of importance that happens either behind or in front of the scenes will escape the attention of these trained reporters and all they see or hear will be recorded in print in Friday's paper.

JACK CONWAY, American boxing editor and the country's greatest picker of winners, will lead the array of stars. Jack has been legal advisor to Sharkey through his ring life, and was instrumental in dropping him in this spot.

DAMON RUNYON, who arranged the match for Mrs. William Randolph Hearst's Milk Fund, will describe the fireworks in his own brilliant way. He is sport's greatest word painter.

NICK FLATLEY, sports editor of the Boston Evening American, will write a descriptive story of the battle as well as sidelights in his own inimitable way.

JACK SHARKEY, himself, will tell how he kept the crown in America, or why it went to Germany, as the case may be. This will be the only paper in Boston to carry the fighter's own story.

JAMES J. CORBETT, former heavyweight champion, also will give American readers an expert ringster's slant on proceedings.

There will be Hype Igoe, internationally known fight writer, and Bill Corum to depict the hundred and one intimate and technical details of a great fight like this one.

That array of flatic experts just can't be beat and assures Boston Evening American readers of the finest accounts of the battle obtainable.

The boys will give you blow-by-blow accounts of the battle and the low down on the blow or incident that settled the title.

If you miss the fight, don't miss the Boston Evening American.

No matter what happens, it's bound to be a knockout.

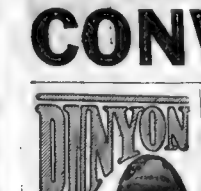
Unfit Golfers to Be Barred From Title Play



by Damon Runyon

NEW YORK, JUNE 11—There as been a sudden switch of exprtorial and lay opinion on the battle for the world's heavyweight title between Jack Sharkey, the American, and Max Shmeling, the German, at the Yankee Stadium Thursday night.

For ays and days you heard so much of Sharkey's prowess that you mht have gathered the impressit that some persons thought he ha an absolute "set-up" in Schmeng. Now the drift is the other ay. Schmeling is conceded a gres chance to flatten the man from Soston. Quite a bit of Schmeng money is beeing odds of 4 tid on this proposition along Broadsy

The witch is due to several reasons. Jne is undoubtedly Hype Igoe's iscovery that Schmelina has bn doing his important trainin in secret up at Endicott. Anor is that Sharkey seems to havbogged down in his work at Orsneburg, and disclosed himself ase trackworn old warrior with t puch paunch

A thi reason is the judgment of outs critics who have been flockin into the training camps the pa week, and have viewed Sharke and the German with fresh es finding Schmeling the younge and keener of the two men

At ost time Sharkey was favorte in b betting at as high as 8 to 5. Jw it wouldn't be surprising if Shaling entered the ring little ur ven money.

The sting ...ge ... has ... comment to reason ... of the on with more logic than prevalent first, and the) have come to he conclusion that a gladiatorwho could knock out Johnny Jako and batter Paolino to a bloody smear, must be better than a ye hand.

Schmelg's Calm Is Remkable

THE ALES OF SCHMELING'S extraordary calm as the hour of battle dws near have had their effect. he keenest observers of fightingmen have been looking the Gesan over the past week and thi all declare they have never an a cooler man

He sits and plays while Sharkey is grouing and glowering. The Germanis a strong reminder to the exits of Mr. James J. Tunney, foerly Gene, as Tunney almost blhely arranged his affairs for thfray with Dempsey at Philadelhia. The general opinion seems to be that if Sharkey hasn't actuallgone stale, his well known nervesave commenced to trauble out.

In tt meantime, public interest in the ot that is to be fought under th auspices of the famous Milk Fnd Charity, of which Mrs. Williss Randolph Hearst is chairman, is increased to such an extent tt the gate receipts may exceed tr expectations. The Yankee Sdium, as it has been arranged for the battle, is scaled to $82a,0(and while the gate is not apt to reach that figure, it will not bfar short of it.

On ber of the fight 20,000 seats re to be placed on sale at $2.10 ach. These are the seats in thopen pavilions, and are unreserved. The sale of the ringside seats or this fight will not break any records, perhaps, but the sale of thecheaper seats will undoubtedly rablish a new mark

Precautions Against Foul Not Adopted

THERE HAS BEEN MUCH talk d the possibility of a foul enteringinto this case, and it seems to methe New York state athletic commssion has not as yet indicated sufficient precautions against that possibility.

R lisregarded the suggestion that he gladiators be required to tae with trunks, and will stick to the ol foul-inviting dark colors of black and purple

CONWAY SAYS SHARKEY WILL WIN

By JACK CONWAY

New York, June 11—Jack Sharkey will win the world's heavyweight championship when he battles Max Schmeling of Germany in a 15-round bout at the Yankee Stadium tomorrow night at the Milk Fund show.

I look for the American heavy weight champion to stop Schmeling inside of 10 rounds.

Jack Conway

Sharkey is in the best conditior of his career. He came through the training grind of six weeks without a mark on a bruise. In all he boxed 90 rounds against three while getting ready for Schmeling. He is now ready to shoot for the title.

I make my prediction that Sharkey will win after having watched the rival heavyweights in training.

In picking Sharkey to win, I am giving great weight to Jack's ring experience. He has been under fire with the greatest heavyweights in the world.

A man who has fought Wills, Godfrey, Dempsey and every other heavyweight of note has a considerable edge on a youngster who has had major bouts with only Risko and Paulino.

It might be a different story if Sharkey were an old man. But he is only 27 years of age and has just reached the peak of his physical fitness.

Sharkey's Experience Ought to Win

He has a background rich in experience and the physical strength and courage to conquer Schmeling or any other heavyweight.

Sharkey's work with his left hand during the closing days of his training was very impressive. He's got tremendous power behind his left jabs. The punches were short, traveling less than five inches.

And when they landed, Jack's sparring partners went crashing against the ropes.

The American heavyweight champion has also shortened up on his right-hand punches. He keeps his right duke on his chest and lets it fly from that position. He does not pull his right back a single inch when he sends it on its errand of destruction.

For three years Sharkey has been battling all comers in his effort to get into a title match. He has reached his objective and intends to make the most of his big opportunity.

Sharkey also considers himself the Standard bearer of America in a bout against the best of the foreign champions. He feels the same about it as his wing did when as a boy he worked on a coal barge during the war and later when he was accepted for enlistment in the navy.

Schmeling Will Weigh 185 Pounds for Bout

The German champion will probably weigh around 185 pounds when he enters the ring. He will be outweighed by Sharkey who will scale around 197 pounds.

Max, however, points to the fact Dempsey only weighed 183 pounds when he knocked out Jess Willard at Toledo.

Schmeling is naturally a counter fighter. He waits for an opening for his right hand and then shoots the work. This is how he knocked out Risko. He waited until Johnny

LAND BOY IN E. H. C. RACE MEETING

Augustus F. Goodwin's gallant little steeplechaser, Land Boy, will again be seen in action at Brookline when the Eastern Horse Club opens its two days of racing at The Country Club on Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

The nine-year-old son of Polyphonie, out of Landworker, is one of the most popular jumpers in America, and with his almost equally famous gentleman rider, J. V. H. Davis, in the saddle, will be sent out after his second Challenge Cup, the feature race for hunters on the opening day's program.

Last year this winner of a Billy Barton, a Westchester Biltmore Gold Cup and a Hunters Steeplechase at Belmont, captured the 20th running of the Challenge Cup steeplechase going away, with C. V. B. Cushman's Danopio second, and Mrs. A. G. McIlwaine's Lunar third.

Ten high class hunters have been nominated for the 30th running of the Challenge Cup at Brookline on Saturday, and despite such good ones as Essex Stable's Rock of Cashel, winner this year at the United Hunts, F. Ambrose Clark's Cloverdale, Eastland Farms Stable's Markham, and Old Mill Stable's Graeme, the Goodwin steeplechaser undoubtedly will go to the post a favorite for his second Challenge Cup in a row.

The Standard son of Polyphonie is a remarkable horse when it is considered that he is small as steeplechasers go, but he has a heart of gold and can pack weight like no other horse of his size now racing over the jumps at the foremost courses of the nation.

JACOBS IS GIVEN LICENSE

New York, June 11 (AP)—The State Athletic Commission, reversing its previous attitude, today granted Joe Jacobs a license as a boxing manager for a period of one year. Jacobs accordingly will be chief second for Max Schmeling in the German's battle with Jack Sharkey at the Yankee Stadium tomorrow night.

The commission's action removed a possibility of last-minute friction, as Schmeling was strongly desirous of having Jacobs, his manager of choice, in his corner when he meets his foe for world heavyweight supremacy.

Jacobs' license had been revoked at a time when Schmeling was being disciplined for failing to go through with a fight with Phil Scott.

To be on the safe side, Jacobs applied both for a manager's papers and a second's license.

The former was refused, but the latter was granted. In fact, the commission added that it had been decided last Friday to give Jacobs a second's permit, but announcement was withheld for reasons known only to the commission.

Giroux Knocks Out Florentino

Portland, Me., June 11—Art Giroux of Montreal knocked out Nick Florentino of New Haven, Conn., in the fourth round of the main bout at the Exposition building tonight.

Giroux knocked Florentino through the ropes and the Connecticut boy was counted out while outside the ring. It was the only knockdown of the contest, in which Giroux has a shade on points up to the climax. Giroux weighed 116, Florentino 114½.

Joey Mack of Manchester, N. H., edged out a decision in a bristling six-round semifinal over Joe Marcianto of Montreal. They are bantamweights.

Hafey Is Out

St. Louis, June 11— Chick Hafey's condition is serious, Dr. Emmet P. North, eye specialist who examined the St. Louis Cardinals' outfielder, said yesterday. Hafey was ordered home from New York for examination. Dr. North said he would not permit Hafey to return to the game without a long rest.

SCHMELING IS READY FOR TITLE BOUT

Binghampton, N. Y., June 11 (AP) Max Schmeling started this morning for the ringside in the Yankee Stadium where he will arrive tomorrow night. He left Endicott in a special car with his first stop scheduled for Hoboken this afternoon.

Endicott, N. Y., June 11 (US)—All is in readiness along this section of the German front for the big push toward New York early today.

At the country estate on the banks of the Susquehanna where Max Schmeling has been billeted for a month, the Deutschland Olympic dismantled his dug-out last night, penning farewell notes to his army of well-wishers up here, packing the little portable phonograph and the German records which, with his other personal belongings will be left here until he calls for them next week either as champion of the world or just plain Herr Schmeling.

The final glove rehearsal was held yesterday indoors as a wind storm blew down the canvas walls of the open air arena yesterday morning. The last drill consisted of four rounds of boxing with Charley Belanger and Lou Barba, after which Schmeling addressed about 400 spectators, and in broken English, thanked them for Endicott's hospitality for him.

The German bomber tossed hand grenades somewhat gingerly at his targets yesterday to avoid possible last minute injuries to his hands. He quit the ring sound in wind and limb and without a cut, bruise or blemish to show for his four weeks of training.

As far as condition goes nothing has been left undone, in grooming the foreign contender. Joe Jacobs knocked on wood as he pulled the big gloves off his big schlieger this afternoon.

Luck With Max, Declares Jacobs

"Luck is still with us," he chirped. "I always worry about an accident on the last day of boxing, but Max took no chances. He wanted to go an extra round but I wouldn't let him.

"If this fight is decided on condition, I have the winner right here. I have never sent a man to the post so fit. He'll be a sensation."

The cool weather has helped Schmeling hold his weight at about 186 for the last few days Jacobs says he should register from 4 pound to a pound and a half above that figure tomorrow at the scales.

"If Sharkey does 196 on the official platform," predicts Herr Joseph, "he'll be well over 200 by the time they get into the ring. Schmeling's weight seldom varies on the day of a fight. Sharkey may have 15 pounds or more on him but that will be just so much ballast to make him drag."

The march toward the Yankee Stadium starts early today. Schmeling and his retinue will board a special car on a train leaving Vestal, a suburb of Binghamton, at 9:15 and are due at Hoboken, N. J., at mid-afternoon.

He will be snatched away from the crowds and driven to the home of a friend in his manager in the vicinity of the battle ground. His beloved cook, Otto Heimann will prepare all his meals.

Yesterday's workout in the slow motion ring at the Jole Pavilion did not reveal anything new in Schmeling's style in fact, he stressed no one blow and his general boxing form was anything but pleasing to the rear guard of experts who hoped to detect something significant in his final gestures.

Fair Weather Is Promised for Bout

New York, June 11 (AP)—Weather prospects for the Sharkey-Schmeling heavyweight battle here tomorrow night appeared of the best today.

"Fair with moderate temperatures tonight and Thursday; moderate southerly winds," was the official forecast.

Diamond Pick-Ups

St. Louis Cards are another club that has been hit hard by the injury jinx. Frankie Frisch, star second-sacker, is in the hospital with a bad knee, Chick Hafey, crack outfielder and home run slugger, has been sent home to St. Louis to have his eyes attended to, Ernie Orsatti, another fly-chaser, has a sprained ankle and Wally Gelbert, regular shortstop, has a leg injury which is keeping him on the bench.

Death Valley Jim Scott, former Chicago White Sox mound ace, made his debut as a National League umpire in the Hub in the first Braves-Cards game. He was stationed at third base and didn't have a decision to make all afternoon. He is reported to be a very good arbiter. He is, if he can call 'em as well as he could throw 'em. He was appointed to take the place of Dolly Stark, who resigned.

The Braves infield with Maranville at short and Chatham at third is considered small but with Andy High at third, Sparky Adams at short and Doc Farrell at second, the Cards' infield is even more diminutive.

FIELD WILL BE SMALLER IN FUTURE

By BILL GRIMES

Before Joe Turnesa defaults or returns to defend his Massachusetts open title, a joint meeting of the executive committees of the Massachusetts Golf Association and the New England Professional Golfers' Organization will be held to reduce future fields to a minimum.

For years, the M. G. A. has been accepting entries of players who have absolutely no right to compete for a state open championship. A field of 150 played during the opening day at Brae Burn. Just about one-third of the players allowed to participate in the championship were in order. There are more than 10 amateurs in this State, who if they won the open, would be entitled to the championship. And the same is true of the professionals.

Corbett Says Sharkey Is in Perfect Condition

By JAMES J. CORBETT
Former Heavyweight Champion of the World

New York, June 11 Rarely have I seen an athlete better conditioned, both mentally and physically, than is Jack Sharkey this fight with Schmeling.

Sharkey was a revelation when I saw him work at his camp. He has knocked up about six pounds of his weight for the Scott affair. He is broader, more powerful and speedier than ever before. Seems to have reached the absolute peak of perfection.

Sharkey lashed a wonderful left hand—the best I have looked at for a long, long time. He mixed his left handed attacks with a crashing right cross and an uppercut. He starts from nowhere at all, lashes with great speed and power. And when he took the defensive ace he was absolutely unbeatable.

He has me hitting with the paralyzing force of Jack Dempsey, but his punch seemed better than that of Dempsey. He never let go with his set until he was reasonably certain of scoring a hit, and the moment he landed he swarmed all over the man with more lefts and rights yet always careful to keep himself covered against any retaliatory punch from the other fellow.

Wanted to knock him out in a punch—and the thing can't be done. Result was that I got to swinging wild and tossed all science and caution aside. I won't do this with Schmeling. I am going to surprise plenty of folks who figure that I may fight what is called an eccentric battle.

"I have plenty of respect for Schmeling. He is young, strong, fast, a quick thinker and thus a fellow who takes advantages of opportunities. He has a good right hand. It may be a great one. I don't know. But I don't expect to sample it. I figure I can outbox Schmeling, wear him down and then knock him out. But I won't be taking any reckless chances. I want this title more than anything in my life and I won't make any mistakes."

I don't believe I will make mistakes. He has changed—radically and for the better. He has just attained the absolute peak in the mental and physical condition needed for the supreme test involved in a fight for a world's title.

Shkey Has Done a Be Job

Sskey has trained to get out of t way of a right hand punch—and think he has done a neat jobHe figures that all he has to fearrom Schmeling is a right and, in g tuning up for the bout, he roobly has built up a good defen but also has picked up a few eouering tricks

Ire works them against Schmelings he did against his sparring rasers, it will be just too bad for Maif the German lets loose with a rht and misses his target

Ied quite a chat with Jack and amg other things he said this

During his training at Endicott Schmeling got away from his usual waiting style. He became the aggressor in his tussles with his sparring partners. He let his punches fly with reckless abandon. It is apparent that Max intends to carry the fight to Sharkey if possible.

The big question is, how Schmeling will act when hit. He was not punched much in either his bout with Risko or Paulino, but is certain to be hit hard and often when he opposes a sharpshooter like Sharkey.

The test of any fighter is as to how he takes a punch.

In Europe, Schmeling had a reputation of having a weak chin. The same thing has been said of most fighters as they have battered their way up the fistic heights. Even Jack Dempsey was stopped by Fireman Jim Flynn. I never give too much weight to what happens to a young boxer in his surge towards the top.

Meanwhile interest in the bout is intense. It is a certainty that the great Milk Fund Show will be virtually a sellout.

Under the latest seating plan, it will be possible to care for 81,000 persons at the Yankee Stadium.

STEPDAUGHTERS OF WAR -:- -:- By Helen Zenna Smith

I whimpered like a puppy. I couldn't go on. I was a coward—I couldn't face those stretchers of moaning men again—men torn and bleeding and raving——

Tosh laughed a funny, queer laugh.

"And the admiring family at home who are basking in your reflected glory? My girl's doing her bit—driving an ambulance very near the line——" She laughed again. "Will they let you off, Smithy? Not likely! You'll never have the pluck to crawl home and admit you're ordinary flesh and blood. Can't you hear them? 'Well back already? You didn't stay long, did you?' No, Smithy, you're one of England's Splendid Daughters, proud to do their bit for the dear old flag, and one of England's Splendid Daughters you'll stay until you crock up or find some other decent excuse to go home covered in glory. It takes nerve to carry on here, but it takes twice as much to go home to flag-crazy mothers and fathers——"

I watch her now running a comb through her hair, softly damning and blasting the knots. Generous hair, Tosh's, as generous as the rest of her, thick, long, red as a sunset in Devon when not grime and grease blackened. As I stare she parts the strands over her right ear, peers anxiously into the square of looking-glass, and emits a string of swear-words before turning to The Bug.

"Lend me your scissors, Bug?"

Her Own Barber
Red Locks Fall

The Bug silently hands them over, lights a cigarette, and passes me the paper packet.

"Everyone read this paper?" asks Tosh.

The B. F. cries out in alarm. "You're not going to cut off your hair, Tosh? Your lovely hair," wails The B. F.

"Why should I be a free lodging-house for waifs and strays?" Tosh laughs hoarsely at her own crude wit. She has, when amused, the big, porky, jolly laugh of a fat publican.

Munch Biscuits
No More Nausea

Snip, snip, snip go the scissors. Snip, snip, snip. The long, red strands fall into the much-scanned, crumpled newspaper. I crane my neck. Have I read it? Is it the Daily Mail or the Daily Express? If it's the Mail I have read it, but if it's the Express there's something I haven't quite finished——

A red curl of Tosh's hair hides the top of the page. I can't see. Perhaps a post will come tomorrow bringing fresh newspapers, we haven't had any letters, or better still, parcels, for six days.

Snip, snip, snip —

"No wonder I've scratched my head off—no wonder I couldn't sleep!"

Tosh points triumphantly to the paper. We interestedly follow the direction of her fingers and go on munching our ginger biscuits. A few weeks ago we should have been ill. But after cleaning the inside of an ambulance it would take more than a few lice to make our gorges rise.

Snip, snip, snip——

"I'll bet you're all as alive-o if you only carried out a smashing attack," chuckles Tosh.

I catch the eye of The Bug and we both grimace—we know Tosh is very near the truth, for we have both been itching furiously for days past. Small tooth combing, though a temporary check, has no lasting effect. We get them from the 'sitters' the cases well enough to sit beside us in front of the ambulances. Straight from the field dressing stations, before that, straight from the trenches, who can wonder the sitters are alive with vermin?

Snip, snip, snip——

Tosh's hair is half off, giving her a curiously lop-sided effect. I wish I had her courage, but a mental vision of mother restrains me. Poor mother, she would die of horror if I came home on leave with my hair cut short like a man's. She wouldn't understand the filth and beastliness after my cheery letters home.

Mother's Ideas
Liken Long Hair

Only dreadful blue-stocking females cut their hair. Besides, mother has always been so proud of my hair—why, I cannot imagine. It is not beautiful hair. It is long, but thin and mouse-colored. Nondescript. Like its owner's name, Helen Smith. Helen Z. Smith. How jealously I preserve the secret of that Z, that ludicrous Z bestowed on me by mother. Z was the heroine of a book mother read the month before I arrived on earth.

She wanted me to grow up like Z. Z was the paragon of beauty, virtue, and womanliness. Mother had been sadly disappointed over the first, I am still the second, but the third—well, Z was never an ambulance driver somewhere in France. I am very dubious about the third.

Snip, snip, snip——

No, I had better not emulate Tosh. It would definitely put the tin helmet on the womanliness. It would also spoil mother's pet story of myself and my sister Trix of how a wee fair head and a wee dark head, lately released from the tortures of curl-papers, we used to walk demurely to Sunday school while mother waved from the front gate.

Father Grew Rich
And Things Changed

Since father grew rich and promoted us to Wimbledon Common mother omits the reference to the front gate—it isn't done on Wimbledon Common to wave from the front gate—but she still bores everyone who will listen (and a lot who won't) with the story of the two wee curly heads.

With Trix a V. A. D. and me ambulance driving I can see those wee curly heads working overtime, while mother drops a sentimental tear on the socks she is knitting for my second-foot brother, her "hero boy."

Snip, snip, snip——

"You'll look awfully mannish, Tosh," warns The B.F.

Tosh winks behind the B. F.'s back. The poor B.F. gasps and goes scarlet. Tosh is revolutionising her ideas of the British aristocracy in private life more and more each day.

Stomachs Strong
Work the Cure

Snip, snip, snip——

We go munching our biscuits and smoking our gaspers. Directly the kettle boils there will be hot Bovril, something to warm us before starting out—thin miserable stuff, for the bottle is nearly empty and there are six of us, but enough to send a glow through our bodies. We think of it with mouth-watering anticipation and watch Tosh marshalling the lively contents of the newspaper more towards the center with a pen-holder.

"What an R.T.O. was lost when I became an ambulance driver," says Tosh.

That goes down well with us, even The B.F. Inwardly we are proud to think our stomachs no longer heave up and down at the sight of a louse. After all, a few vermin more or less make little difference. Our kit-bags are full of them in spite of Keatings and Lysol and our bodies a mass of tiny red bites with the tops scratched off.

We are too hardworked to spare the necessary time to keep clean and that is the trouble. It is four weeks since we had a bath all over, nine days since we had a hair wash and we haven't had time. We dare not hot bath in case we have to go out immediately afterwards into the rain. The last girl who did it was in hospital with double pneumonia, and not expected to live.

Tosh finishes her barbering. She shakes her head like a shaggy dog. I see to my satisfaction that the paper is the Mail and not the Express. I have read it, after all. Tosh crumples it into a ball, takes the enamelled chamber from under the stretcher and [illegible] the ashes in it. I [illegible] but after a few seconds begins to [illegible].

"Wholesale slaughter," says Tosh. "Well, it's the fashion in our circles, 'neat-oe pas' Anyone got a fag?"

Mrs. Itch Again
Brings Work, Too

[illegible] sheet of paper [illegible] ends, and [illegible] into the open [illegible] We all [illegible] a chance and our heads become too unbearable. If Constantinople knew there would be [illegible] on Mrs. Itch as Tosh has [illegible] it is pandemonium [illegible] to do in the [illegible] we have any, [illegible] a certain orderly duty, the [illegible] are distinguished [illegible] by sending me out with a [illegible] and scrub brush into the [illegible] path where the ambulances stand to sweep up the [illegible] paper, cigarette ends, and rubbish that were lying in the mud. I had completed the awful [illegible] of warming my hands near the canteen fire because the [illegible] forbids us to go on cleaning [illegible] and Constantinople [illegible].

What are you doing here?" she inquired, majestically. "You are supposed to be ambulance-cleaning, I thought." I explained about my frozen fingers. "Oh!" said Mrs. Itch, with a sweet smile. "Then perhaps you haven't enough work to do to keep your fingers warm. Perhaps a little extra work will help.

Raquel Gets Wonderful Hat and Chance to Be Model in Paris

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Raquel Rojos, in revolt against her home in Hermosa, on the Mexican border, accepts a loan from Jack Farrell, a young engineer, and goes to New York, where she puts up at the Hotel Brixton and waits for Farrell to come to marry her. One night at the theater, a strange blonde woman invites her to a night club. Raquel accepts and they go to the Club Divine, escorted by Mr. Benny Barnes. To escape Barnes' amorous advances, Raquel accepts the challenge of a tango performer who has criticized and dances with him. At the end of the dance, she flees back to her hotel, leaving her hat at the club.

CHAPTER 13

Raquel awoke the following morning feeling as if she had been in a dream. Something unusual had happened. Something fearsome, stimulating. Where had she been?

To a night club. Memory came back to her. To a play. Then to a night club.

"Fudgy old Mr. Benny Barnes," she said aloud, and laughed. "And that blonde woman! She wasn't so beautiful, now you come to think of her in the daylight."

She tried to visualize Benny. He eluded her. She forced her mind to the task. No. He was gone. Only a smidgen of him remained. And a crawly feeling on her flesh where his hand had slid up her arm.

She sat up in bed. Across the room, in the mirror atop her bureau, another Raquel with curving scarlet lips and gleeful eyes was watching her.

"We're going to get up," she told this other Raquel, "go over to Fifth ave., our street, and buy a dress. A dove grey one like that rich girl wore in the play."

The luxury of a bath, warm tapering to cold. The satisfying feel of the pretty under things she had bought in the small shop near the hotel. They were only a shade pinker than her flesh.

Wonderful Hat

Raquel Desires It

Adios, old rag of a dress! Now the hat. Where had she put the hat? She had—why she no longer had a hat. Left it on the table in the Club Divine, when she ran away from Benny. She'd have to go without a hat until she could buy another. Lots of people in New York went without hats. It was a fad.

Along the cross-street in the morning sunshine. Sunshiny world.

Raquel turned the corner into the new thing. Halfway along the block she halted suddenly. A hat-shop was at her right. The Chez Alphonse. In the very center of the shop-window, etched against a silvery grey panel, was the most wonderful hat she had ever seen. Raquel drew closer.

The hat was made of black velvet, crushed close to the crown. But the black velvet was the least of it. The wonder of this hat was the delicate white feather fronds that drooped from its side like languid morning mist caught on the wing of the night.

"I should like to see the hat in the window, please," Raquel told the tawny young woman who undulated toward her as she entered the shop. The tawny one elevated pencilled eyebrows.

"The Patou with the parasidas? That is an import. Quite expensive." The tall of her head, her eyes traveled down Raquel's worn green dress, and obviously bone-soles. Settled on her scuffed black kid shoes. "We have other models, sale hate," she added grudgingly.

"I wish to see the hat in the window," said Raquel. Her arrogance singed the edges of the tawny one's ennui. Who was this saleswoman to judge of her purse?

"There's a bold one," she heard the saleswoman telling someone behind a screen near the window. "She wants the Patou model, no less. Did you get the trick clothes? And no hat! How they find their way up on the Avnue from the Left Side is beyond me."

The comment was made loud enough so that it would reach her. Of this Raquel was certain. Her white teeth came together, shone hostilely between her half-parted lips. She disposed herself in leisurely fashion before a beveled mirror wreathed in Cupids and chrome flowers.

The saleswoman brought the hat. Placed it on Raquel's head. She would not trust it to the customer's crass fingers. She stepped back, her amber eyes wide, believing in Cinderella had become the Princess of Beauty.

"Astonishing!" she admitted. "The black and white, with your coloring. As if someone had turned on the light inside you. The black velvet, against your pallor—you should wear rainbrass, my dear, and self clinging black, always."

Raquel had no false modesty She knew the saleswoman, compelled to admiration by the sheer wonder of her beauty, had spoken the truth

"Yes," she said, "the hat becomes me. Is it very costly?"

"A hundred and fifty dollars. The paradise feathers, they are choice."

Raquel left the shop with heavy feet and heavier heart She dared not risk it. A small fortune for a hat. Her roll of bills would be getting thin. They must last until Farrell came to New York. She did not leave the hotel again that day Of what use was he—adventure in ugly clothes? She was morose and unhappy

Another morning came. With it Raquel's feet led her unerringly to the window of Chez Alphonse. The hat was still there its white feather fronds beckoned her. She must try it on once more. Just try it, that once

Inside the shop the tawny saleswoman was nowhere in sight. A middle-aged scildulous woman with pursed lips sniffed at Raquel's request to see the hat, "the black one with the white feathers." Instantly Raquel knew this acid woman had been the other one behind the screen the day before. With deliberation, Raquel opened her cheap little purse, purchased from a drug-store collection on Sixth Avenue. The roll of bills protruded from its yawning top. The acid woman stared, at once became alert.

Becomes Alert

At Her Roll of Bills

"It's your hat, mademoiselle," she gushed in a syrupy way. "So chic! Genteel! Charming!"

"But the price." Raquel fought back her rising want. "If you could let me have it for less, even a hundred dollars—"

The woman pushed the suggestion away.

"No," she said. "We could not. It is already a bargain. Monsieur Alphonse would never consent."

A subtle change in the woman's voice. Servility. Raquel's eyes flew to the glass. They met the scrutinizing face of a man standing at her shoulder. A smallish man with a chalky face and narrow, stooping shoulders

"Mademoiselle likes that hat, Miss Laura?" he asked.

"It's the most wonderful hat I've ever seen." Raquel exclaimed. Her eager black eyes still held the man's sage unsmiling ones in the mirror. "I want it—so much. But the price—"

The form of the chalky-faced man receded. In its place before her mind's eye, was a red-faced comforter in a buttered blue cap pushed back, scratching his head with blunt thumb and forefinger. "I can't change this bill—" She had not paid for that train ride to Phoenix. Her red lips curved into a smile, at once imperative and pleading Warm lights gleamed behind the myopic curtains of the eyes.

"I can do nothing about the price—unless—" The chalky-faced man paused. Licked every detail of her face, her delicately curved figure. "Have you ever considered becoming a model, Mademoiselle—?"

"—Rojos. Raquel Rojos." Duplicity would not do with him.

"I am Monsieur Alphonse. I am in search of a model. For my Paris season. Two are already selected. Your type is—sensational. If you are free—"

A half hour later Raquel left the shop. The hat with the paradise feathers was on her head. It crowned her beauty as a royal diadem crowns a queen. Tonight she would have dinner with Monsieur Alphonse. She would decide—or not she would keep the hat.

The Beauty Box

—BY HELEN FOLLETT—

With buoyant health, a sound nervous system, a digestion that works like a clock, a woman should awaken in the morning feeling as if she can carry the world on her shoulders. A mouth-and-head headache signifies that the pick-up processes of sleep have not been completed, that body repairs are not sufficient, or that the intestinal tract is sluggish. Headache accompanies nearly all intestinal disorders

The vapid expression of mouth-breathers is a common sight. They are air-starved Breathing through the mouth is not as effective as breathing through the nostrils. The function of the nose is to heat, filter, moisten and purify the air before it pours into the lungs. Mouth breathing produces an offensive breath and makes the tongue dry.

Cold compresses aren't liked by neck wrinkles. If there are round-and-round lines encircling the throat, try the cold compress. Dip a washcloth in ice cold water, wring out partially, place on the neck and cover with a dry Turkish towel. In a short time the washcloth will be steaming hot. Remove it and slap on another cold one.

New Chic Hangs on Latest Fringe

By ANN ARDEN

Ann Arden broadcasts latest style news over WHDH every Tuesday and Thursday at 11 a. m.

FRINGE, IN spite of its graceful loveliness, somehow always conjures up visions of the really impossible decoration it has been in the past When we first heard that Paris was preparing fringe as a trimming, we must admit that we sighed and resigned ourselves to the worst Imagine our delight, then, upon seeing the fascinating guises in which it is returning to the mode It is new incarnation it is no longer just trimming; it transcends such description to become one of the many subtleties of the new femininity

FRINGE, LIKE pleats, more or less owes its returned popularity to the Grecian influence Pleats, of course, have never experienced the complete fashion shelving that fringe has had for many seasons. It is true, though, that fringe is one of the outstanding mediums being used to express the fluid grace of the classic silhouette Evidence of this is seen in several of the more recent imports from well-known couturiers

ILLUSTRATING the chic that hangs on the fringe of the mode, the gown pictured, with its accompanying shoulder wrap, is a lovely example Of shell pink crepe, it moulds the figure, small tucks across the front holding a softening fullness over the hips; the decolletage of medium depth is new, and the fringe, of matching shade falls from the knees The shoulder wrap has fine tucks forming a draped line in back, is fringed deeply and can be variously adjusted as a shoulder wrap, or tied about the waist as an overskirt

GOUPY IS one of the prominent couturiers using fringe One of her recent creations has fringe on a frock of yellow crepe Roma, and also as an inside trimming to the graceful short cape

FROCKS of definite Grecian derivation—long flowing draperies from shoulder to hipline, and more and more frequently accented by the use of smart fringe—are effecting especially feminine silhouettes.

WHETHER YOU are 16 or 60, your favorite jewelry is apt to be pearls. Now simulated pearls in strands of two colors are to be found to add a contrasting note to the ensemble Pink and black make an attractive combination

ANN ARDEN will answer questions concerning clothes, social costumes, or fashions generally. Address questions to the Boston Evening American or the Boston Sunday Advertiser or to Station WHDH.

Tips on Human Nature

Why is "Faith" always pictured as a young girl clinging to a rock, instead of as an old girl clinging to a beau?—or a fat girl clinging to an electric belt?

Middle age is merely a state of mind in which the vanity, the ambition, the joy and the love of adventure go into a coma, from which nothing but the last trump will awaken them.

A man may lose his last hair his last friend, and his last dollar but not until he loses his enthusiasm does the fuse burn out in his soul.

Now and then you meet a woman who actually LIKES spinach and a man who really prefers an intelligent, thoughtful girl to a whoopee baby

Many a second-rate cook has made her tired husband a dinner relished by serving it with plenty of applesauce, nourishing it with smiles, and seasoning it with cheers and kisses

Solicitude is what makes a woman watch her husband to see that he is being good; suspicion is what makes her watch him to see if he is being bad.

A man stops confessing his troubles to his wife as soon as she begins greeting them with uplifted eyebrows, and that "Just-as-I-expected" look.

You may trip and sprain an ankle in the new long skirts, but, at least, you don't have to strain your mind worrying over whether the seams in your stockings are straight or not.

Using Up the Old Cake

From Martha Lee's Wednesday Morning Broadcast Over WHDH, the Boston Evening American Station

All too often we find two or three slices of cake left over from a previous serving, too dry to offer the family as cake pure and simple, but not dry enough to grind up for crumbs Here are two favorite desserts that offer attractive ways of using this left-over cake

CAKE WITH PEACHES

Cut cake slices into rounds with a large biscuit cutter Ice cream with a thin confectioners' sugar or lemon icing Dip the hollow side of half a peach in powdered sugar and place this on top of the cake Sprinkle the side of the cake with grated cocoanut Whipped cream may be added as an extra garnish

Martha Lee

Another nice cake and peach combination is made thusly

Arrange slices of stale cake preferably sponge cake on individual dishes. On each slice set half a canned peach with the hollow side upward. Pile whipped cream in the hollow of each peach Then for each serving take a rounding tablespoon of currant, raspberry or bright jelly and 2 or 3 tablespoons of the syrup from the peaches. Let this stand over a slow fire to melt the jelly and then beat until smooth and chill. When cold, and the dessert is ready to serve, pour the syrup over the peaches and cake

Mock Eggs are attractive and unusual and easily made. For these the sliced cake is cut in rounds, allowing one slice for each person. Drain the juice from a can of peaches or apricots. Let this stand a half-hour or so. When ready to serve, cover the cake with whipped cream and place half a peach or apricot with the hollow side down in the center of each slice. Sprinkle with a little nutmeg to represent pepper on soft boiled eggs.

You Have Right to Love

DEAR Miss FAIRFAX

I am a young woman of 24, married and have two children and have been separated from my husband for four years. My divorce will come up in October. Now, I love a fellow of 26 and he seems to like me He works out of town and he comes and sees me once in a while. I would not want to fall in love with him because it seems I have no right to love. He is single and I know his parents would object. I would be very glad if you could help me. DIANA.

Dear Diana: There is no reason why you should not care for another man and expect to marry again if your young man knows your situation and about the children Of course, if you haven't explained it you should at once.

Miss Fairfax will be pleased to answer all love problems sent in by readers.

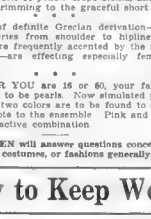
How to Keep Well -:- By Dr. Royal S. Copeland

Building Up for the Health of the Baby to Come

Motherhood is one of God's greatest gifts to the world. There isn't a home that can function properly, without a mother. If she is sick, the whole family is in distress. Motherhood is sacrificing suffering and very often ill health.



Dr. Copeland

Young mothers have a better chance today than they had 50 years ago. Scientific care has greatly lessened the dangers of childbirth. No greater advance in the conservation of health and life has been made than in this field. Prenatal care has done much to lessen the dangers. Modern methods of obstetrics are making safe the life and health of mother and child.

The expectant mother needs expert attention and the best of cares. Doctors have learned that she must have exercise, out-of-doors life and recreation. These are just as vital or even more important than at any other time of her life

She should be protected and assisted in her family cares by every member of the family. It is the duty of husband, relatives and friends to give every aid possible in the most unobtrusive way.

It is best that the expectant mother should plan her own diet, just as she would at any other time. This must be done in order to preserve full health and vigor She should eat such food as will give adequate fuel value, as well as body-building material.

After the fourth month there should be an increase in the amount of food taken. It is important to meet the demands made upon her by the burden. Body changes are carried on at a greater rate and she must have more protein food. Milk is of the highest value in this respect, while meat and eggs, because of their special qualities, are also very valuable.

Milk is rich in lime, an element often lacking in the diet. It is particularly important that the expectant mother, as well as the nursing mother, should take milk in liberal quantities, at least a quart every day

Milk is lacking in iron, which is a very necessary mineral in the system. This may be had by eating meat, eggs and green vegetables.

We must consider the vitamins also. Unless the food contains an abundance of the vitamins, mother and child are sure to suffer. To get these, if the child is to be healthy and strong, the mother must include in her daily diet one or more salads, and two liberal helpings of green vegetables. Among such vegetables are spinach, lettuce, cabbage, cauliflower, peas and beans

She should eat too liberal amounts of bread and butter She may well include preserves, honey and simple desserts. Another thing to take some refreshments between meals in order to make up the required food intake These may include an orange a glass of grain cereal with cream bouillon with egg yolk or milk and graham crackers

All these things, together with a cheerful and calm spirit, should make for your well-being and the well-being of your child. Calmness of spirit is half the battle. Modern enlightened care of mothers brings reforms in life and health

Problems of the Heart and Home

—By BEATRICE FAIRFAX—

You Should Not Sit at Home and Wait for Him

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX

I am 16 years of age and am now in junior high. My mother and father allow me to go with decent fellows and have them come to see me in my home

One fellow I love dearly says he loves me but doesn't think himself good enough for me; so, very often says "goodbye," and then comes back. Although I would rather be home with him than out with other fellows, do you think that I ought to stay home and wait for him to come? DOLORES

Malden

Dear Dolores: Of course you are too young to at present want to for one daughter to make up her mind You are both just experimenting with love right now, and inclined to dramatize the situation Treat him nicely when he comes to see you if you like, and have all the other friends you want

Are You Really in Love?

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX

I have been going with a fellow for five months. I am 18 and he is 20. Bill treats me very nice and sometimes when I'm with him, I actually dislike him and I cannot bear him. But when he leaves me saying we'll come again I can hardly wait. Sometimes (most of the time) I love him, but what I want to know is why my feelings change. Should I wait and see what my feelings will be like.

Chelsea. WAITING

Dear Waiting: Are you in love with Bill or merely with the delightful knowledge that he finds you lovable? At a guess, I should say you are "in love with love" and suggest that you do not commit yourself entirely to this man until you are quite sure it is he you want and not his loving.

Your Parents Are Wise

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX

I am a girl of 17½ years and am considered good looking. I expect to graduate from high school shortly. I have been allowed to go out with only one fellow and only one time. This time I speak of was a dance at school. Once since then I have been allowed to go on a party up to the house. I like him very much as he shows great respect to girls, but my mother refuses to let me see more of him because he isn't very well off. Do you think this is quite fair? Please help me ANXIOUS BABS

Dear Anxious Babs: Hard as it may seem to romantic youth, a young man's financial status has a great deal to do with his eligibility as a "steady." Your parents are wise to veto too much boy interest until you are old enough to make wise selections. Even though there may be nothing serious between you and the young man, your parents are acting in a manner to forestall the possibility of its happening

She Is Too Young

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX

I am sixteen years of age and have been going with a fellow for two months His name, I shall say, is Jack. My people like him very much. This is the problem:

Two weeks ago I met Bill We fell for each other right off, I told my family about him, but they will not let me go with him, or bring him to the house. They said I could only go with Jack. Bill has taken me to his home and his people were very kind to me and they told Bill they liked me very much

Don't you think I am too young to have a steady fellow? I do. Won't you tell me what you think? Bill says that if my people do not approve he was going to see my father. What shall I do?

'Just Discouraged EDITH

"JUST DISCOURAGED" DEAR Yes, I think you are too young to have a "steady" fellow. Also too young to have meetings with friends of whom your parents do not approve. There is no harm in dress your questions to the Boston Evening American or the Boston Sunday Advertiser or to Station WHDH.

SMART SAYINGS OF CLEVER CHILDREN

The Boston Evening American will pay $1 for published smart sayings. Address "Smart Sayings," Boston Evening American.

Mother—Gracious, Helen, stop screaming at the top of your voice. What on earth are you trying to do?

Helen—Oh, I'm playing with Tommy, he's daddy and I'm you and he's coming home late.

Return the Gifts by All Means

DEAR MRS BEECKMAN:

1—I have recently broken my engagement. What is the proper thing to do with my engagement gifts? Should they be returned to the people who gave them to me? Or are such gifts kept regardless of what has happened?

2—Should they be returned in person, or by mail or parcel post?

3—If the latter, should an explanatory note accompany them?

HEATHER.

1—The gifts that were sent to you as felicitations for a status that no longer exists, should be returned when the engagement is broken.

2—Either—whichever is the more convenient.

3—Yes, you should write a note of explanation. That is, a very short, impersonal note, explaining that the engagement which has been broken, but not explaining why. Something like this:

Dear Mary

Jack and I have broken our engagement by mutual consent, and I am returning to you the gift that you so beautifully and thoughtfully sent to me to celebrate our engagement. Since it no longer exists, I feel that I have no right to keep the gift. I am sure that in spite of your friendliness and sweetness, you will understand

From Martha Lee's Wednesday Morning Broadcast Over WHDH, the Boston Evening American Station

All too often we find two or three slices of cake left over from a previous serving, too dry to offer the family as cake pure and simple, but not dry enough to grind up for crumbs Here are two favorite desserts that offer attractive ways of using this left-over cake

CAKE WITH PEACHES

Cut cake slices into rounds with a large biscuit cutter Ice cream with a thin confectioners' sugar or lemon icing Dip the hollow side of half a peach in powdered sugar and place this on top of the cake Sprinkle the side of the cake with grated cocoanut Whipped cream may be added as an extra garnish

Martha Lee

Another nice cake and peach combination is made thusly

Arrange slices of stale cake preferably sponge cake on individual dishes. On each slice set half a canned peach with the hollow side upward. Pile whipped cream in the hollow of each peach Then for each serving take a rounding tablespoon of currant, raspberry or bright jelly and 2 or 3 tablespoons of the syrup from the peaches. A Man's Class Ring

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN

Kindly tell me on which hand and on which finger is it proper for a college man to wear his class ring?

I can never be enthusiastic about any man's wearing any ring, and if he feels that he must wear one, depends on wearing a new, he should wear it on his little finger.

EVENING New York Stocks AMERICAN News of Street MARKETS

STOCKS DROP TO NEW LOWS THEN RALLY

More than a score of important issues erased $4 to more than $10 a share, setting new lows on the moves or for the year.

There was a good rally in a few issues near the close.

Yesterday's sharp closing rally appeared only to have attracted new liquidation. Today's mid-session rally, following early irregularity, was not maintained, although it slowed up transactions for a time.

MANY ISSUES OFF

The late bear onslaught served to depress a very wide assortment of issues.

U. S. Steel, Radio Corp., American Telephone and General Electric quickly sold off $4 to $5 a share or more.

American Can, Johns-Manville, Air Reduction, Westinghouse Electric, Allied Chemical, American Tobacco "B" and Eastman Kodak soon sagged $7 to more than $10.

J. I. Case, wide moving specialty, relinquished more than $20 a share.

The bears apparently based their new onslaught on the terror of the weekly steel trade reviews, published this afternoon.

"Iron Age" estimated that steel production had declined this week to 69 per cent of capacity, from 72 per cent last week. Preliminary estimates appearing in Wall Street yesterday had indicated that operations had declined to only about 71 per cent of capacity.

The publication added, however, that leaders in the industry best known for the accuracy of their forecasts looked for gradual improvement within from 30 to 60 days, with steel production running between 75 and 80 per cent of capacity in the fall.

TRADING PACE SLOWER.

For most of the session the trading was in comparatively light volume, but the violence of yesterday's upturn was in itself enough to bring out liquidation being held up for better levels. This attracted fresh bear attacks, apparently no special inclination to support the market until the selling had run its course.

Wall st. is now giving closer attention to developments in Washington than usual. The tariff bill has become a chief topic of board room conversation, and there is a general feeling that any decisive action on the bill, finally disposing of it, would be a bullish development.

Corporate news contained several dividend reductions or omissions by smaller companies, principally Celotex, which passed the 75-cent quarterly payment. These developments affected sentiment adversely.

Bearish rumors, many of them branded as ridiculous in responsible quarters, were widely circulated. One of the more favorable items was an announcement by Western Union management that telegraph business had improved markedly during the current quarter.

Special meeting of stockholders of Virginia Electric & Power Co., which is under Stone & Webster management, will be held June 20 to consider an agreement of merger entered into with the City Gas Co. of Norfolk. All the common stock of the City Gas Co. is already owned by the Virginia Electric & Power Co.

Soft Coal Output for Month Is Up

Lackawanna Gives Its Income Report

New York, June 11 (AP)—The Delaware, Lackadanna & Western Railroad today reported earnings for the first quarter of $936,711, equal to $5 cents a share, compared with $2,326,995, or $1.38 a share for the like quarter of last year.

Canadian Power Completes Merger

New York, June 11 (AP)—The Canadian Power & Paper Corp. has acquired the Anglo-Canadian Pulp & Paper Co., on the basis of an exchange of 2¼ shares of Canadian Power, for one share of Anglo-Canadian.

Rubber Is Steady

New York, June 11—Rubber futures were steady today. July 12.00; September 12.20; December 12.60. New contracts—September 12.26, December 12.70.

Bank Stocks Viewed by Brokers as in 'Buying Zone'

William Schall & Co. report that an investor in New York purchased 15,000 shares of Deposited Bank Shares—Series N, Y. This transaction involves approximately $185,000, and is one of the largest purchases of a fixed trust security ever made by a single investor. William Schall & Co. consider this purchase a confirmation of their opinion that bank stocks are now in the "buying zone."

LOW YIELD

H. W. Milton—I am grateful for past advice. I own 10 shares each Pennsylvania railroad and St. Louis-San Francisco preferred. How about a purchase of American Tobacco "B," or shall I wait for the split-up?

Ans.—American Tobacco "B" is a sound stock. The company handles one-third of the cigarette and smoking tobacco business of the United States. Dividends have been paid from 1907, current rate four cents a quarter of 1925. December, 1929, stockholders received 83 extra. Net in 1929 equaled $11.53 a share compared with $11.19 in 1923 and $10.29 in 1927. There has been official acquiescence of rumors that the management contemplated a split-up. At recent high levels you would get only 2 per cent. You can get 4½ per cent from savings banks and 6 per cent from savings banks and 8 per cent from sound preferred stocks. You can count on an income from the two issues you have.

S. O. OF NEW JERSEY

E. N., North Weymouth—I want to buy stock and have under consideration Standard Oil of New Jersey. What is your opinion?

Ans.—Standard Oil of New Jersey has an excellent record of earnings and dividends. Current annual regular dividend is $1 a share. Extras of 12½ cents a share were paid in each quarter of 1927 and 1928; increased to 25 cents a share June 15, 1929, since maintained. Net in 1929, was $4.75 a share, compared with $4.43 in 1928. However, if you want to buy the stock now you would get only 2 per cent, contrasted with savings bank interests of 4½ per cent. Weighted against this is the outlook for price appreciation over a long pull.

FOR WORKING MAN

S. S., Boston—Please suggest a suitable investment for a working man, with dependents, who has saved $5000.

Ans.—You should protect your savings with guaranteed first mortgages. Under present conditions, however, keep $2000 in the savings bank for emergencies. Invest the other $3000 in Title Guarantee & Trust 5½s, bringing $165 annually.

Predict Big Year for Majestic Radios

At a banquet attended by 1000 Majestic radio dealers and salesmen a big year was predicted by these leaders in the organizations. The speakers were William C. Grunow, president of the Grigsby-Grunow Co., manufacturers of the Majestic; Herbert E. Young, Grigsby - Grunow vice-president, in charge of sales; and the following officers of the Majestic Distributors, Inc.— J. "Russ" Hangarder, sales promotion manager; Jerome Rutherford, general sales manager, and Edward McCarthy, general manager.

An enthusiastic ovation from more than 1000 Majestic radio dealers and salesmen last night greeted William C. Grunow, president of the Grigsby-Grunow Co., manufacturers of Majestic radios, at a dinner and pre-showing of next season's models at the Elks Hotel.

The widened line of radio receivers, including luxurious cabinet-built types which may be obtained on interior decorators' or architects' specifications, went on display in New England for the first time. An attractive array of electric refrigerators, soon to be placed on the market by the Majestic organization, also made their bow. Production of the refrigerators, it was announced, will be opened on a day's notice in the Chicago plant of the company containing more than 200,000 sq ft of floor space.

James J. Davin

Among those in attendance were: Herbert E. Young, vice-president in charge of sales; James J. Davin, sales promotion manager; Ray Erlandson, director of education and broadcasting; Harry H. Bailey, director of franchises; Earl Macke, of the radio suspended knife department; Redfern Hollinshead, Majestic tenor; Lee Seymour, director of the Majestic Theater of the Air; Jack Dalton, sales representative, and Ray Freyd, all of the Grigsby-Grunow Co.

BIG ORGANIZATION

Officers of Majestic Distributors, Inc., at the speakers' table, were: Edward H. McCarthy, general manager, who was toastmaster; Jerome Rutherford, general sales manager, and Russell Hangarder, sales promotion manager. Gil Poore and Irvin Dalo represented the Hartford branch.

President Grunow, principal speaker, expressed his appreciation to the dealers of New England, which he described as one of the firm's finest territories. He said:

"Majestic will always make the best possible radio for its kind, regardless of price. When we set a price on a product, we set it on the basis of volume. Majestic today is a huge organization. It has grown from only a few of us to 15,000 persons—and with the dealers, 30,000 persons.

Radio was pictured as an industry just beginning by Sales Promotion Manager Davin. He drew a vision of homes in the future lighted, heated and refrigerated by radio.

"Radio is just beginning," he said, "and we don't know how far we are going. We are just passing the entertainment stage and there are 10,000,000 U. C. sets for 20,000,000 wired homes in United States.

"In one sales school at Chicago we have trained more than 4400 persons, and we are aiming to train a total of 10,000."

He credited his concern's success to a "Don't be stingy" policy, and urged all dealers to adopt it for their salesmen.

TO FIT EVERY PURSE

A tribute to the dealers was paid by Vice-President Young, salesman, who credited the organization's success to their co-operation. He announced a promotion for Jerome Rutherford of Majestic Distributors, Inc., who now is to supervise sales in parts of New York State as well as in New England.

Radios to fit every purse now are offered in the Majestic line, McCarthy stated, and he emphasized the soundness of his firm's financial position.

Early days in broadcasting were recalled by Rutherford, who spoke of the sales and advertising campaign for the coming year as "one of the mightiest." He announced that a series of five one-half-hour broadcasts weekly has been arranged for the coming school year on the Columbia Broadcasting networks under the sponsorship of Grigsby-Grunow Co. The programs will be of an educational nature, designed

General Instructions: The weight must be on the toes. Every instruction is a tap. Always dance from the hips and not from the knees, keeping all joints and muscles loose.

1. Jump and land on left foot (On the count of 1).
2. Swing right foot forward, scuffing floor sharply, making a tap. (Count of 2.)
3. Swing right foot backward, scuffing floor sharply, making a tap. (Count of 3.)
4. With right foot in air, jump and land on left foot. (Count of 4.)

(The nearest explanation to this back slide is a backward jump, without the foot leaving the floor, as the ball of the foot must slide along the floor.)

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN

LARGEST EVENING CIRCULATION IN NEW ENGLAND

Hoover Works to Entangle U. S. With the League Against Party Wishes

With elation two advocates of the League of Nations, the New York Times and the Baltimore Sun, report from Washington that the United States is to be represented by one of its ablest diplomats at Geneva, seat of the League of Nations.

Up to this time Geneva has had nothing but a plain U. S. consul. All our diplomats in Switzerland have heretofore been located in Berne, the Swiss capital, but a special situation has arisen.

Drew Pearson, Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, wired from Washington on June 3:

"The increasing part which the United States is playing in League of Nations affairs has caused the State Department to appoint Prentiss Gilbert, one of its permanent and ablest diplomats, to be consul at Geneva in order to handle these activities.

"Mr. Gilbert is to act as consul, but has been given the rank also of diplomatic secretary and will serve for a short time as secretary of the American embassy in Paris en route to Geneva.

"Mr. Gilbert will assume his new duties in Geneva some time prior to the League of Nations Assembly which meets in September.

"Recently, the American consulate at Geneva was transferred to much more auspicious quarters in the center of the city. This, together with the fact that the State Department last week approved the sale of one-third of the German reparations bonds in the United States, and the fact that never before has a man of Mr. Gilbert's calibre been sent permanently by the United States to Geneva, has led to the general impression THAT NEVER SINCE THE WILSON ADMINISTRATION HAS CO-OPERATION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND EUROPE BEEN SO CLOSE."

The Republican party in state conventions and in primary elections throughout the nation is declaring emphatically against the League of Nations, the League Court and foreign entanglements of all kinds.

Meanwhile the Hoover administration at Washington is busy endeavoring to entangle the United States in various foreign treaties and compacts and agreements, including the League Court and the League of Nations itself.

The situation seems incongruous until it is recalled that in 1928 THE REPUBLICANS DID NOT ELECT A REPUBLICAN PRESIDENT. THEY ELECTED A WILSON DEMOCRAT.

Mr. Hoover in his career has been practically everything; a foreign resident, an internationalist, a League of Nations Democrat, and a declared Republican.

But in all the varied impersonations of his political career he has been more genuinely a League of Nations Democrat than anything else.

He was foreign resident a great part of his life, though he never actually became an expatriated American.

But when he returned home after his long years of residence in foreign lands, it was with ideas of internationalism that made him naturally and genuinely a Wilson Democrat.

Most of Mr. Hoover's political speeches prior to his Republican candidacy for President were delivered in support of President Wilson and Wilson's League of Nations policy.

Mr. Hoover is not a Jefferson Democrat, for Jefferson believed with Washington in this country minding its own business and keeping free from foreign entanglements.

Mr. Hoover was purely a Wilson internationalist, and so publicly declared himself in his speeches and writings.

This column has published extracts from a typical Hoover speech of those days, an address delivered at Palo Alto in October, 1919, ADVOCATING OUR ENTRANCE INTO THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS WITHOUT ANY RESERVATIONS WHATEVER.

The leopard does not change his spots. The Ethiopian does not change his skin, the confirmed internationalist does not change his sentiments though he may change his party to gain political advancement without changing his convictions.

Mr. Hoover obviously has not changed his convictions and he is quietly working as hard today to get the United States into various foreign entanglements as he did when he was in the Wilson administration speaking and writing publicly on behalf of the League of Nations.

Our Busy Port

Week-End Business Sets Records

The late Charles S. Mellen once said in an exclusive interview with the Boston Evening American that Boston is filled with people who make fine banquet speeches at night to boom the port and who sail from New York on the next day.

That was nearly twenty years ago when Mr. Mellen's plan to gobble up all the methods of transportation in New England ran afoul the courts and brought temporary disaster to our two great railroad systems.

Happily, Mr. Mellen could not say so much today.

We have experienced possibly the busiest week-end in the history of this port. Ocean liners have sailed in and out in a continuous majestic procession while ships of cargo have calmly nosed their way to and from our wharves and piers.

The German and English lines have found Boston at last a profitable port of passenger traffic. The French lines are beginning to make regular calls. Coastal trade has begun a smart revival. The future is bright.

Best of all, our people of New England have steadily developed a port mindedness for Boston.

If this is provincialism, let us have more of it.

Mrs. James M. Curley

The love of James and Mary Curley was a theme worthy of the bard.

She was a gracious lady of many talents.

She possessed a laudable ambition for her family, a sweet, firm courage which strong men could well envy and a lively interest in the affairs of her city and State which fired the enthusiasm of those who knew her.

But above and beyond these was the affection for her husband and the devotion to her family.

We grieve with him over her passing. We rejoice with him in the inspiration which her memory always will be to him.

'AW, G'WAN!'

It robs the many to favor the few.

It is an injustice to those it purports to help—the farmer, the housewife, the wage earner, the home builder.

It is the result of log-rolling, wire-pulling and vote-swapping. It is the pet measure of the Special Interests, engineered through legislative halls by the puppets of the Special Interests, solely for the Special Interests.

It never should become the law of the land.

H. G. Wells Writes

ON "THE SCIENCE OF LIFE"

That the capacity for regeneration was one of the points which separated animals from plants was firmly believed in the 18th century, and when Abbe Trembley discovered the little green polyp Hydra, and was at a loss to know whether it was an animal because it moved or a plant because of its being fixed and green and flower-shaped, he used regeneration as a test.

H. G. Wells

If he cut it in half and it regenerated, it would be a plant; if it did not, it would be an animal. He cut it in half, and both halves regenerated into perfect little wholes. However, common sense prevailed over preconceived theory.

He had seen the Hydra capture living prey, swallow and digest it. He pronounced it an animal, but an animal which could regenerate.

Starting from this discovery, biologists eagerly tested all kinds of creatures for their regenerative capacities, and found that regeneration is by no means a rare or isolated phenomenon in animals, that worms could grow new heads or bodies, lobsters and crabs replace a missing leg or feeler, and even air-breathing vertebrates such as newts regenerate limbs and tail.

A good-sized lobster loses its claw; and at successive moults we see a little bud of tissue grow on the stump, take shape, become formed into a minature new claw (still wholly useless for the big creature on which it is growing), and enlarge step by step until the animal is once again completely equipped.

A newt has a leg bitten off; it, too, will bud out a whitish lump from the cut surface, the bud will elongate and construct itself into joints, bones and muscles will form inside it, and toes sprout out at its end, until the newt has achieved what is impossible to us lords of creation.

It will restore just what was lost, and no more; if only the hand had been bitten off, the bud would turn into a new hand; if the bite was at the shoulder, into a whole new limb.

We take a planarian worm, and cut a small oblong out of its body. The fragment cannot eat, for it has no mouth. And yet it throws out an army of new and active cells on both its new frontiers, and these, dividing and growing and differentiating at the expense of the rest, form themselves into a new head and hinder end.

At first these new parts are too small for the body; and accordingly remodelling goes on not only in these new-produced regions, but in the original fragment as well. They grow, it shrinks; and both they and it change shape, until in place of the original helpless fragment there is a new and well-proportioned little flatworm.

Regeneration is so queer and unfamiliar a process to the human investigator that it was thought at one time to be a special protective device evolved by creatures which are particularly exposed to injury.

It was supposed for example that newts, being peculiarly liable to have their limbs bitten or torn off, had therefore evolved this wonderful aptitude for re-growth in order to save themselves from extinction.

But, as a matter of fact, regeneration is a very surprisingly widespread thing. Moreover, it is apparently a primitive thing, a power possessed by all the simplest forms of life, and one which we have lost, not one that the newt and the lobster and the flatworm have gained.

Worms, polyps, sponges, and so forth, are capable, we have seen, of total regeneration. Fragments of the body, torn off, can build up a whole new individual. It is evident enough that this power is related to sexless reproduction; both are aspects of a tendency which primitive living matter has of rebuilding and reorganizing itself.

Vanishing America

By ARTHUR BAER

Cities are getting so big that all orchards will soon consist of telegraph poles and lampposts.

And all waving fields will be traffic cops' hands.

Towns are increasing by leaps and bounds. There are 14,000,000 people in the metropolitan area of New York, half of whom do not know how to knit a sweater.

What's happening to the country while the cities are putting on fat around the waist line, That's the stinger in the spelling bee.

The country is shrinking like flannel in the tub. It's getting so narrow that the cows have to stand sideways between two office buildings.

The farmer is in a big town college taking engineering lessons so he can run a Ford tractor.

These are only a few changes that have occurred in the rural districts in the last few decades.

Everybody wants to live in town now in order to be near the movies. And also to get a stem-winding hold on the community chest.

The farmer is right. Why should he wait for the Senate to help him and grow whiskers for the owls to snap at? In town he has a bath tub, elevator service and hot and cold water.

Listen, World!

By ELSIE ROBINSON

Deliver Me From Contentment!

I have a sweet, walled garden. It is very quiet in my little garden, inside the rose covered walls, beneath the cool, blue veils of the great gum trees. Quiet and fragrant and filled with peace. Nothing hurts. Sitting in my garden, I can forget all the ugly conflict that rages outside. I can drug myself with beauty and comfort and peace.

Elsie Robinson

There is only one ugly thing in my garden—the great slugs that hide in the wall and creep beneath the shadow of the leaves. Nasty yellow fellows—soft as custard. A pinch of salt dissolves them. They cannot stand salt. There is no toughness in their pampered fibre.

* * *

I love that little garden. The memory of it is never absent from my heart. Always I am longing for its sweetness and peace. And yet—I never stay there long. For I am afraid of it. I am afraid of that sweetness and peace, that comfort and safety. I am more afraid of it than I am of anything else in life.

* * *

Something happens to me when I stay too long in that garden—when I shut myself away from ugliness and conflict and live within those walls. The hardness goes out of me—and curiosity and love of adventure—and courage. I grow comfortable and complacent. I begin to think that I, too, am apart from other people, as my garden is apart from dusty, beaten earth. Different from other people—more sensitive. I forget that I am nothing but a common cabbage at heart. I begin to treat myself as though I were an orchid—or at least an Easter lily.

And I grow timid and lazy. Naturally I'm built for battle and plenty of it. But, drowsing in my garden, I shrink from conflict. I don't want to be bothered or bewildered, criticized or challenged. I just want to sit there and write lovely words—far, far from all dirt and distress.

In short, I become exactly like one of my spineless slugs. Soft as custard. Unable to face life. At a touch of reality I shrivel, as a slug shrivels and dissolves at a touch of salt.

That is why I do not stay very long in my garden. I am afraid of its peace. So I go away—although all my lazy, cowardly, self-indulgent nature rebels at going away. I go away and seek a dangerous and difficult life—a rough, unwalled life where I must toughen myself against reality. I go away to keep from being a slug.

And always, wherever I go I see slugs—as a terrible warning. Human slugs, oozing around hotel lobbies—lolling in theater and limousine seats. Fat, soft, complacent, comfortable human slugs who can't stand a touch of reality—who shrivel and dissolve under the salt of reality.

If God's listening, I hope He hears this prayer:

"Give me all that's coming to me, God. Make things as hard as I deserve, and I deserve them plenty hard. Make me poor and despised and desperate—if that's part of the program. But don't, I pray, make things easy and comfortable. Deliver me from contentment! Keep me from being a slug!"

Capital Silhouettes

CHAIRMAN Huston should have done a Jim Cannon and walked out on the lobby committee instead of the national committee.

IT'S HARD to make King Carol the Second of Rumania realize that times have changed since King Charles the Second of England signalized the Restoration by returning to London with his fair charmer, but will Carol make Mme. Lupescu a duchess?

AFTER ALL, where would the British nobility be today if Charles II hadn't had a keen eye for a pretty woman?

THE REPORT that the Republican plan to make a hard fight to elect a senator in North Carolina indicates that the supposedly empty G. O. P. campaign chest in reality contains money to burn.

A GOOD WAY to head off a deficit from a pension law for the soldiers of the republic is to refrain from passing a tariff bill that will cut down the customs revenues.

AS EVERYBODY else seems to know it, probably eventually Claudius Huston will learn that there is to be a new chairman of the Republican National Committee.

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McINTYRE

New York, June 11—Belle Livingston seems, temporarily at least, to have become the reigning queen of New York's night life, despite the recent prohibition raid on her establishment. She has been queening it in a salon along an exclusive strip of Park ave, an Amazonian type and a citizeness of the world.

Born in a Kansas village, she began a life of adventure early and married, among others, an Italian count, a British army officer, and a railroad capitalist. She has roamed the seven seas in private yachts, invaded darkest Africa and endured the isolation of far-away outposts.

She has a hearty laugh and a tongue as sharp as Texas Guinan's. She can suddenly snap into a cold stare that brings rowdy drunks instantly to heel, and needs no retired pugilist to do her bouncing. Several years ago Miss Livingston wound up a hectic career in Paris.

She became a part of that American colony found relaxing in Harry's Bar, the Ritz cocktail room and other haunts where world wanderers "await the breaks." I remember seeing her now and then holding court among the self-exiled in Willis Morgan's pork chop palace back of Elffel Tower.

Somehow she managed to get passage to America, and landed in New York with only a few dollars, but courage aplenty. She has not catered to the mob. Her salon is "itty, very itty." Scarcely anyone drops in until about midnight, and the real people do not arrive until around 3 a. m.

From stark poverty, Miss Livingston has not only become financially independent, but is on terms of easy intimacy with Park ave.'s cafe society. Young debutantes on the loose hail her with hosannahs. A night out is incomplete without "dropping into Belle's."

She chants with a narrowed eye and lifted finger that her rendezvous is a place "where the best minds meet the best minds." Unless the crowd is strictly up to her standard she remains in her quarters. She has found, as so many others found, that snootiness often pays in the metropolis.

Broadway, too long over-romanticized, is losing much of its night glamour to resorts eastward. Its fickleness is reaping a just harvest. The Broadway of today seems interested chiefly in such figures as Arnold Rothstein and Legs Diamond. Its sentiment is maudlin, its tears crocodilian and its camaraderie as false as the paste of its jewels. No longer is it the street that whips the universe.

It was 42 years ago DeWolf Hopper first recited "Casey at the Bat" from the stage of Wallack's Theater. The poem had been clipped from a San Francisco newspaper and handed to the actor by the house manager. Today it is Hopper's trade-mark and Nemesis. He has never since been able to appear in public without reciting the rather mediocre poem that he has made a classic. From stage, banquet board and over the radio he has delivered it thousands of times.

Mr. Hopper is 72 and is varnished with a bland contentment. A pigmentary disorder at times gives one side of his face the appearance of a gun-powder explosion, but he has the erect carriage of the superb young athlete—poised for a pistol shot. Daily, when not on tour, he drops into the Lambs, where his rich booming voice and liveliness add zest to an atmosphere of perpetual light-heartedness. He has been married six times and divorced five times, and each wife from whom he was divorced left him without the slightest tinge of bitterness.

New York lights up at dusk in a thin, pattering rain. A brightly rouged girl steps from a rooming house in West 48th st. to the curb and waves her hand. A taxi swerves in. "Drive toward the river," she said, as I passed along—and, I thought, a bit grimly. And such is the impermanent stuff called life in the Roaring 40's. I have been searching the headlines a little apprehensively ever since.
